Antilynching Bill.

This bill proposes to uphold the laws and the courts of the land and deter persons from mob violence and to give to the humblest citizens of the land the full protection of the law.

SPEECH

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, January 25, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to more than three score speeches in the House on this antilynching bill. These speeches have been made by Republicans, Democrats, and Mr. LONDON, the Socialist from New York. The speakers have come from every State in the Union. The sentiments of the North, the South, the East, and the West have been expressed. Every speaker without exception has denounced lynching and mob rule in unmeasured terms. Every speaker has declared that lynching and mob rule were the greatest menaces to law and order, to our courts, to our civilization, and to the life of the Republic. In all these speeches from Republicans and Democrats, north, south, east, and west, not one Member has spoken one word approving lynching or mob rule.

President Wilson during his term of office, and his Attorney General likewise, denounced lynchings and mob rule and pointed out the dangers to our country unless they were stopped. He and his Attorney General in a public statement called upon the country without regard to section or party to take steps to restrain the mob spirit and banish lynching from our country.

Every public speaker and every writer that has discussed this subject in this country, so far as I have knowledge, has denounced lynching.

We have had some lynchings in the State of Kentucky in the last few years, but all of our daily newspapers, the Louisville Herald, Louisville Post, Courier Journal, Lexington Herald, Lexington Leader, Louisville Times, and other newspapers have, with one voice, denounced this crime. This has been true of public officials of the State of Kentucky and leading men of our State regardless of politics.

Every reputable newspaper and magazine, both North and South, East and West, in this country have likewise denounced lynching as a crime against society and warned the American people of the growing power and danger to the very life of our Republic. It was considered of such moment that the Republican National Convention assembled at Chicago in 1920 put a plank in its platform pledging the Republican Party to enact legislation to protect the citizens of this country against lynching and mob violence. President Harding in his message to Congress has appealed to the Congress to provide a Federal law to deal with lynchings.

Every thoughtful, law-abiding citizen must have long realized that something must be done somewhere and somehow to check the growth of mob spirit in this country.

ALL OF US ARE OPPOSED TO CRIMES AGAINST WOMEN.

When all the Members of this House, President Wilson, President Harding, and the American press denounce lynching and mob rule, it does not mean they indorse crimes against women, murder, or any other crime for which men and women might have been lynched. There is not a man in this House but what looks with horror upon the crime of rape. To me rape is an unspeakable crime. I feel that every man, either black or white, who is guilty of such crime should be put to death, and this is true as to many of the atrocious crimes of murder. There is just as much consideration and respect for womanhood in one party as another, or in one section of the country as another. All of the chivalry or gallantry is not in the Republican Party or in the Democratic Party or in the North or in the South. Any man who is a half man desires more than anything to see the womanhood of this country not only protected but respected.

THE LAW AND THE COURTS SHOULD BE SUPREME.

Our forefathers sacrificed their fortunes and their lives for our country and in order to establish a Constitution, laws, and courts. Our Federal Constitution and our State constitutions provide that every person charged with crime is entitled to a fair, impartial trial and to be confronted by his accusers. The mob in its wild spirit of frenzy and hate is the accuser, the arresting officer, the jury, the prosecutor, the court, and the executioner.

The victim is denied all of his rights under the laws and the Constitution. No member of any mob would think it right or fair to himself to be tried and executed under circumstances like that. Every member of any mob in his own particular case would demand a fair and impartial trial as provided by the laws of the country.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN LYNCHED.

If the lynchers would confine their killings to men who were guilty of rape, there might be some excuse to continue the practice, but the truth is that the mobs have lynched many women and children in this country. Only about one out of six of the persons who have been lynched in this country have even been accused of crimes against women, and in many instances it turned out that the person accused was not guilty. Many Negroes of the South have been lynched on very trivial charges.

From 1889 to 1921, 3,436 persons have been lynched in the United States. Only 570 of these were charged with rape or attempted rape. Of the number who were lynched, there were about 70 women, and there were also some children. Both white and colored women were lynched. The following table will show the number of persons lynched in the several States:

State.	Number of lynchings, 1889–1918.	Number of lynchings, 1918–21.	Total lynched.	Number of women lynched.
Georgia	387	43	429	6
Mississippi	373	32	405	12
Texas	335	19	354	6
Louisiana	313	13	326	4
Alabama	276	16	292	7
Arkansas	214	17	231	5
Florida	179	23	201	2
Tennessee	196	3	199	1
Kentucky	169	2	171	4
South Carolina	120	8	128	4
Oklahoma	96	3	99	2
Missouri	81	4	85	.....
Virginia	78	2	80	.....
North Carolina	53	10	63	.....

Only 16.6 per cent of the persons lynched as set out in this table were charged with rape. Many of the persons lynched were burned alive. The bodies of others were burned after they had been slain, some were drowned and others shot or beaten to death. The following article from the Memphis Press indicates the brutality of some of these lynchings. It refers to the lynching of Henry Lowery, a negro charged with murder. He was burned at Nodena, Ark., January 27, 1921. This paper gives the following account:

More than 500 persons stood by and looked on while the negro was slowly burned to a crisp. A few women were among the crowd of Arkansas planters. Not once did the man beg for mercy, despite the fact he suffered one of the most terrible deaths imaginable. With the negro chained to a log, members of the mob placed a small pile of leaves around his feet. Gasoline was then poured on the leaves, and the carrying out of the death sentence was under way.

Inch by inch the negro was fairly cooked to death. Every few minutes fresh leaves were placed on the fire until the blaze was past the negro's waist. Even after the flesh had dropped away from his legs and the flames were leaping toward his face, Lowery retained consciousness. Not once did he whimper or beg for mercy. Once or twice he attempted to pick up the hot ashes in his hand and thrust them in his mouth in order to hasten his death. Each time the ashes were kicked out of his reach by members of the mob. As the flames were eating away his abdomen, a member of the mob stepped forward and saturated his body with gasoline. It was then only a few minutes until the negro had been reduced to ashes. Words fail to describe the suffering of the negro. Even after his legs had been reduced to bones, he continued to talk with his captors.

I offer no excuse for crime for white or black, but would it not have been much better for the lynchers, for that community, and for our country had this man been tried in an orderly way and put to death as provided by law, if he deserved death under the law? He was a poor, friendless wretch. He would have been tried by a white jury, before white officials, and upon the testimony of white witnesses, and, of course, there would have been no doubt of the result had he been proven guilty.

Most of the lynchings are in the Southern States. The black man in every instance is tried by white people. As a rule, he is poor; and if he is guilty there certainly will be no trouble in convicting him and giving him such punishment as he merits under the law.

The following is a headline in the Chattanooga Daily Times, January 28, 1921, in speaking of the lynching of this man Lowery:

BARBARISM A NATIONAL CRIME.

The lynching of the negro, Henry Lowery, by an Arkansas mob near Nodena, in that State, an account of which appeared in these columns Thursday morning, was accomplished with something more of diabolism than usually attends such lawless outbreaks. There have been frequent instances of burning victims, but it has usually been done after death. In this instance the man was bound to a heap of dry timber, his body saturated with kerosene, and then burned and tortured until death ended his agony. The Governor of Arkansas has made some perfunctory remarks about the enormity of the crime, and threatens an investigation, but that will be about all there will be to it.

It has long since ceased to be said that these mobs are made up of vagabonds, toughs, bums, and vicious idlers—this one was, apparently, composed of determined and responsible men, respected in the communities where they live and altogether representative of the sentiment of their neighbors. State authority will, therefore, hardly reach them.

In such circumstances a great impulse will be given to the movement for a Federal law against this crime. There will be those who, while objecting to Federal interference in purely State affairs, will not be long in concluding that there may be a Federal issue in the preservation of the civilization of the Republic. The most ardent State-righter will hardly dispute the statement that burning human beings at the stake is barbarous, inhuman, savage, and un-American. The Federal Government may, without offense, declare that such practices are repugnant to the spirit and the soul of the Republic, and that those who indulge them are outlaws and enemies of their country and its institutions. Treason is a national offense, and so may burning human creatures at the stake come to be a crime such as treason. Lynch law run mad, as carried out by this insensate and inhuman mob, is a direct and flagitious assault upon the civilization of the American people and a wanton and unpardonable crime against the moral and spiritual sense of the Nation. The Nation may, therefore, decide that it may, without violating the rights of any State, take cognizance of this pagan savagery and provide a penalty for it so drastic and severe as to render it exceedingly dangerous for future mobs to indulge it.

This article in the Chattanooga Times, a Democratic newspaper, points out that the Federal Government may without offense declare that such practices are repugnant to the spirit and the soul of the Republic, and that those who indulge in them are outlaws and enemies of their country and its institutions, and to consider such crimes as treason against this country and an assault upon the civilization of the American people. The mob takes the place of the law, the officers, and the courts. The mob overturns the law, the officers, and the courts, and this is treason in a small way. Of course, if mob rule should be extended and its scope widened it might overturn the States or overthrow the Republic. The mob is anarchy in action, and for these reasons the lawmakers, Presidents Wilson and Harding, and the public press of the country denounce lynching as one of the great menaces to this Republic. The mob denies to citizens the guaranties provided in the State and Federal Constitutions. The mob for the time nullifies the law and overturns the courts.

IS THERE ANY RELIEF?

There are more lynchings in the United States than in any other civilized country of the world. We boast of our civilization, yet we are not able to give to our citizens the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution. Every Member of this House recognizes the danger of mob rule. They agree that it is wrong in principle. They all agree it should be stopped, and it is practically agreed that the States have been unable to control this character of crime. Many Southern States have passed antilynching laws, yet lynching continues unabated. All Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, agree that lynching is a crime against the State and the Nation, and it should be stopped. Up to this point Democrats and Republicans agree. A majority of the Democrats in the House say that nothing can be done and that the Federal Government is powerless to carry out the mandate of the Federal Constitution in guaranteeing to every citizen the equal protection of the law. The Democrats say that Congress is powerless to check this evil; and while the Democrats say that they are against lynching and that lynching is a heinous crime, with the exception of the Hon. BEN JOHNSON, of Kentucky, and a few Democrats in the North and East, the Democrats have fought this bill with every power at their command. They have tried every way possible to defeat this legislation.

REPUBLICANS UNDERTAKE TO FIND REMEDY.

The Republican side of the House is unwilling to admit that the greatest Nation of the world, with a population of nearly 110,000,000 people, leading the world in schools, churches, and homes, in commerce, industry, and government, and having solved all the great problems that have come to us through nearly a century and a half, are unable to solve this problem and to correct this great evil. While the bill before us is not all it should be, yet we think it is a step in the right direction. The Republicans are willing to make an honest effort to solve this problem. When the people know that the Federal Government will investigate and help prosecute men guilty of lynching and mob violence, it will go a long way toward checking these crimes.

OPPOSED TO TWO FEATURES.

While I favor this legislation, yet I can not give my assent to sections 5 and 6 of the bill as they are drawn. I think the $10,000 damages should only be recovered from the persons engaged in the lynching. I think to require this damage to be paid by the taxpayers of any particular county will render the law unpopular and help to defeat its enforcement. I am willing for the guilty parties to be punished and to bear the burden of the damages. Again, I think that part of the bill that permits a recovery from the county or counties through which the lynched person might be taken or in which he may be lynched without the knowledge of the officers of such county would not be sustained by the courts.

Under the bill as drawn the lynchers, as has been done in many cases, might take a man from the jail or officers in one county and in high-powered cars pass through several counties before reaching the point where the victim might be lynched. They would pass through these counties at night. No one would know about it and no one could with reasonable care anticipate such visit, and they might lynch the man in a county remote from the crime without the knowledge of the officers or the people of such county. I do not think the taxpayers of such county or counties should be required to pay damages in the sum of $10,000. These features of the bill, in my opinion, are unconstitutional, and I shall vote for the amendment cutting out these sections as they are drawn. No county should be held in damages for the act of the people from some other county when they had no knowledge of the crime and the people and officers of the county could not by the exercise of ordinary care have known that the victim would be brought through their county or lynched in their county, or prevented the lynching. I think these provisions in the bill, if they should be written into the law, will render the law obnoxious and help to defeat the very purpose of this legislation. I not only favor this legislation but I favor the most effective legislation that might be enacted that will be fair and just to all the people and which will uphold the laws and the courts.

PROTECT THE LYNCHERS AS WELL AS THE LYNCHED.

Many good citizens have been drawn into mobs and their whole lives clouded and destroyed. I favor this legislation in order to uphold the law and the courts and to deter men, if possible, from joining mobs or lynching parties, and to give to every man in this country a fair and impartial trial.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ACTS IF STATE FAILS TO ACT.

Under the provisions of this bill the State courts are given an opportunity and the right to punish the members of the mob who may lynch any individual, and if the State courts fail to act and bring the perpetrators to justice within 30 days the Federal courts may take jurisdiction of the case and prosecute the offenders, and upon proper showing assess damages. We think this will keep many good men and will deter most men from entering into this sort of a crime or becoming a member of any mob. If this law keeps most men out of lynchings and mob violence, it will accomplish much for them and at the same time uphold the laws and the courts of this country and give to each and every citizen full and equal protection of the law.

FREEDOM AND PROTECTION FOR ALL.

Our Democratic friends in their platforms and their speeches have said much about the freedom of the black man and the rights of the black men and the yellow man and in giving democracy to the people of the Philippines and other parts of the world. Of course I want to see all people enjoy all of the freedom that they are entitled to enjoy, but I am more concerned in giving equal and full protection of the laws to the humblest citizen in our country. To my way of thinking murder or the crime against women is no less a crime when committed by a white man than when committed by a black man. The criminal of no color or class should receive immunity. The criminals of all colors and classes should be punished according to their crimes, and the humblest citizen of our land should be given all of the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States and the State in which he lives.

OF

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 14, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have not allowed myself to become blinded to actual conditions or stampeded into a change of convictions by the letters that have just been read, revealing, as I view it, the desires and hopes of experts and naval officers who want the largest naval establishment possible under the most liberal interpretation of the recent treaty. If this House means simply to comply with the directions of the experts, why take up the time in further considering the bill. I for one feel that I have a duty to perform. I want all the information on the subject which the experts can give, and then I shall vote for what I feel is just to the people whom I represent.

I shall support the bill as the committee has reported it. I heartily approve their findings relative to the size of the Navy. The bill has the support of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. These able men have gone into every phase of the question. We know them to be 100 per cent Americans, and know they would not advocate legislation that in any particular tended to lower the standards of the Republic. The report they have made is deserving of most earnest consideration.

The question before us is an amendment to the committee bill increasing the enlisted personnel of the Navy by 19,000 men. There is no disagreement as to maintaining the full treaty fleet of 18 battleships and other necessary auxiliary vessels. We are about all in accord as to the officer personnel of the Navy. But when it comes to adding over 19,000 men and increasing the annual cost of the Navy from $50,000,000 to $80,000,000—and no one has so far been able to justify such a course—I propose to take a stand in the interest of an overburdened and long-suffering tax-ridden people. They have been promised relief. They saw a rainbow of hope when the great Conference on Limitation of Armament announced its momentous and world-embracing agreements.

What will the American people think when they are informed that our trent? Navy in an era of peace will cost them over a million dollars a day? That is exactly where this proposed amendment is leading.

The bill before us calls for an expenditure of $233,000,000. If the amendment is adopted, it will add about $50,000,000 more. But let us not forget that this bill does not cover all the activities of the Naval Establishment.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has just called attention to some of them.

There is a bill pending here to-day for increased pay for the Navy which will mean, when passed, $15,000,000 more. There is a bill pending for $8,000,000 for the Navy for Air Service construction. That will have to be added to this bill. There is a bill pending, or one that will be pending, for the cancellation of the contracts due to the conference limitation, which requires the cessation of construction on several battleships now under way. That will cost $75,000,000 more.

Figure it up yourselves, my colleagues, and you will find it runs far in excess of a million dollars a day for the Navy alone.

Mr. Chairman, the Conference on Limitation of Armament called by our great President was the consummate blossoming of 1,000 years of man's aspiration to square his deeds by the mystic touch of the "better angels of his nature."

In his matchless address on the 12th day of November, 1921, calling the conference to order, President Harding said:

Out of the cataclysm of the World War came new fellowships, new convictions, new aspirations. It is ours to make the most of them. A world staggering with debt needs its burden lifted. Humanity which has been shocked by wanton destruction would minimize the agencies of that destruction. Contemplating the measureless cost of war and the continuing burden of armament, all thoughtful peoples wish for real limitation of armament and would like war outlawed. In soberest reflection the world's hundreds of millions who pay in peace and die in war wish their statesmen to turn the expenditures for destruction into means of construction, aimed at a higher state for those who live and follow after.

In a few weeks the conference had finished its work and unanimously adopted its wonderful and far-reaching declarations, and the President was called to say a parting word. May I quote a few sentences from that speech to the delegates?

You have written the first deliberate and effective expression of great powers, in the consciousness of peace, of war's utter futility, and challenged the sanity of competitive preparation for each other's destruction. You have halted folly and lifted burdens, and revealed to the world that the one sure way to recover from the sorrow and ruin and staggering obligations of a World War is to end the strife in preparation for more of it, and turn human energies to the constructiveness of peace.

I had fondly hoped, Mr. Chairman, that in fixing the size of our Navy under the treaty we would not haggle and split hairs in an endeavor to make the personnel as large as possible.

What is the reason for such action?

What nation do we fear at this time?

Europe is bankrupt. Her domain is dotted with new-made graves, and we certainly have not offended nor do we mean to offend any people. Our whole attitude has been one of sympathy and helpfulness. It has been said we need a strong Navy to prevent any attempted invasion of our territory.

England has the only Navy that equals ours. Do we fear an English invasion? Then, why are we leaving that international boundary line, 3,000 miles long, to the north of us separating us from British territory without a fort, a war vessel, or a mounted gun? It has been an imaginary line separating peaceful neighbors for over a century.

A little while ago I was talking to a Canadian statesman in the House of Parliament at Ottawa, and he remarked how fortunate it had been that we had no guns along that line. "If there had been forts," said he, "some infernal fool might have fired a reckless shot and gotten us into war."

Why do we need so many men in the Navy? We are keeping the required number of ships. We can get extra men in 24 hours, but it takes a long time to build battleships. The committee has provided in this bill for an average of over 1,000 men for each of the 18 capital ships. That is more than they had on them when the treaty was concluded. Now, it is claimed they need about 200 more men for each ship, yet no one has shown such increase to be necessary. In a crew of 1,000 men can be found all the expert seamen, navigators, engineers, electricians, gunners, radio operators, and so forth, that would be needed in peace times. If these vessels required more men in the event of war, the extra men would be mere helpers, assistant electricians, steam fitters, painters, and repair men. The country is full of such labor, available at all times.

Another argument advanced is that we need an increased force because England has some vessels that are speedier than ours. In God's name, does the gentleman think a warship would develop additional speed by placing 100 or 200 more men on it? The question of speedier vessels is one that is to be taken care of in the new ships that are later to take the place of some of the 18 in the fleet.

Does anyone think that an enemy ship would regard one of our ships an easy prey because its peace personnel was only 1,000 men? Ah, my friends, the commander of the enemy ship would know that our 1,000 were of the Nation of men that invented the steamboat, the forerunner of all navies. He would recall that under the American flag are the sailors whose countrymen originated the airplane that flies with the eagle and the submarine that moves in ocean depths amid the monsters of the deep. He would know the American ship was manned by experts whose countrymen gave the world the telephone and telegraph. In a sentence, the enemy commander would know that he was about to go up against 1,000 men proud of a lineage and history unequaled in the traditions of navies and armies—Americans. [Loud applause.]

Do not misunderstand me, my colleagues. I want to give our Navy every sort of equipment the treaty specifies, but I do not want to go beyond that. The taxpaying people are sick of war and its awful carnage and waste.

If we could recover the amount of money invested in just 2 of our 18 treaty battleships, we could build a $500,000 college building in each State of the Union and have enough money left to give each of the colleges an endowment fund of $1,000,000. With the cost of the entire 18 ships available, we could duplicate that work nine times.

Mr. Chairman, I am about to make a statement that is appalling to me, and I wonder if the people of the United States comprehend its significance. The statisticians of the Bureau of Standards have just reported an accurate analysis of the expenditures of the Government for 1920. It shows that 93 per cent of our vast expenditures are war costs. To state it in a different way, out of every $1,000 paid by the people in taxes the sum of $930 went for obligations arising either from past wars or for preparation for possible future wars. Three per cent, or $30, of the $1,000 went for general governmental purposes; $30 went for public works; and $10 for education, research, and development of the race.

Have we a hope, my friends, that the Conference on Limitation of Armament is a step toward getting away from the cost of wars? Even if we carry out in a modest way the terms of the 10-year treaty our Navy alone will cost us during that period approximately $3,000,000,000. My good friend over there is thinking that I know but little about this subject. As an expert on naval affairs I am sure I could not qualify. No part of my district borders on ocean or lake, and there are no large rivers. Some one has said that my district in West Virginia is so dry that bullfrogs can be found 11 years old that have not learned to swim. [Laughter.]

But it does not take a naval expert to interpret the longings of a people whose war burdens are 93 per cent of the total cost of their Government.

The people are calling for relief. Progress is delayed by exorbitant taxes and high railroad transportation rates. Congress should speedily do all in its power to give relief.

I can appreciate the sentiment that is being created by the men whose lives have been dedicated to the problems of national defense. I am fond of these men. I am proud of their achievements. I have no word of censure because they want big things. They are devoted to their calling. Their environment and training spurs them on. They dream of battles and fleets. But I must get the proper perspective and do what is best for my country.

I know it sounds fine to relate to the youth of our Nation the wonderful story of the American Navy. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, formerly chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, is reluctant to see us turn aside from building a Navy that will become supreme on the ocean waves. He recalls the long struggle to build up our Navy, the pride the people have in its history and achievements, and urges an enlargement over the recommendations of the committee that will cost many millions of dollars.

The genial and eloquent Member from Boston [Mr. GALLIVAN] wants a Naval Establishment even larger and costlier than the big Navy advocates are pleading for to-day. He trembles with emotion as he expresses his fears that a $300,000,000 naval program will not link us up with our glorious past, and as a result our schoolboys will be deprived of the inspiration to patriotic duty, because our Navy will no longer do honor to the deeds of heroism of John Paul Jones, Admiral Farragut, and the "modest but immortal Dewey."

I join my good friend in singing the praises of these great American naval heroes, but I would remind him that just a single one of the 18 battleships provided for in this bill is more powerful than were the fleets of either Jones or Farragut or that earlier line of American ships that whipped Tripoli and swept piracy from the high seas. Those matchless men, with their little wooden vessels, won the plaudits of the world and gave a new luster to the escutcheon of our Republic. In the traditions of a great land—in poem, song, and story—these heroes, and even their ships, are immortalized.

Are we by this bill retaining and equipping a Navy that will not dim the memory of Dewey? Ah, my colleagues, it is with pardonable pride we recall the achievements of the Navy during the administration of William McKinley.

Our total appropriation for the Navy in 1897 was, in round numbers, $34,000,000; and that was the Navy of Dewey and Schley and Sampson—the Navy that sent the Spanish fleets to the bottom of the sea and shattered every timber in the Spanish ship of state without the loss of an American seaman or ship. To-day Congress is authorizing the maintenance of a Naval Establishment costing for next year practically ten times as much as the Navy that added such a glorious chapter to our history.

Coming down to the beginning of the World War, we find the Naval Establishment functioning then—1916—with the same number of battleships that we are to have under the terms of the recent treaty, at a cost of less than $150,000,000. Surely with no enemy in sight the naval officers and experts can get along on a $300,000,000 peace basis next year.

The American people voiced a mighty approval of the President's lofty sentiments, already quoted. Shall we disappoint them in the results that are to follow? I have confidence in the ability of our admirals and our able Secretary of the Navy to take this very liberal appropriation and maintain a Naval Establishment reflecting the genius of a great people and in full conformity to the ratio agreed upon by the Conference on Limitation of Armament. [Prolonged applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. ANDREWS,
OF NEBRASKA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, April 19, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the report shows a disagreement in the committee on this bill. Out of 35 members of the committee 6 have taken issue with the committee bill. Thus we have 29 to 6 in favor of the committee bill. It is reasonable to assume that the 29 members of the committee have been equally diligent with the 6 in ascertaining the facts and framing the bill that will harmonize with the 5-5-3 treaty agreement. Those that have spoken in support of the committee bill have done it on the ground that it grants the necessary amount. Those who have opposed the bill have seldom mentioned economy, which is a fundamental duty of the hour. I shall cast my lot in favor of the majority report with 29 of the committee, as against the 6 who oppose the bill. But under the five-minute rule I shall seek an opportunity to express my views upon this measure.

I have no desire to embarrass the Navy Department or the Navy in any manner whatever. We need not look to them for economy. If we count upon them for economy we will never secure it. But believing that this retrenchment can be safely made, and therefore should be made, I shall cast my vote for the committee bill.

A large majority of the Appropriations Committee assure me that 67,000 enlisted men will be sufficient to manage the 5-5-3 treaty Navy efficiently in time of peace. In support of that proposition they tell us that the Navy Department has heretofore handled a larger number of ships than would be required under the 5-5-3 treaty Navy with an enlisted personnel of only 51,000. Accepting that fact as correctly established there seems to be no reasonable doubt that the treaty Navy can be managed efficiently in peace times with 67,000 enlisted men. That number would give them 16,000 more than they had employed to operate efficiently a larger number of ships heretofore in time of peace.

The proposition fixing the personnel at 86,000 would add 19,000 to the number proposed in the committee bill. That addition would increase the expenses of the Navy for the next fiscal year $40,000,000 beyond the figure required by the committee bill. Other items would also be added necessarily as indicated in the course of the debate. Thus it is clearly disclosed that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] would increase the expenditures for the next fiscal year approximately $60,000,000. Thus far no manifest necessity has been disclosed in support of that course of procedure.

Holding steadily in mind the necessity for retrenchment and economy in every possible way, I shall vote for the committee bill and thus avoid an additional increase of expense to the extent of $60,000,000 for 1923.

Without money in the National Treasury you can not load the guns, you can not hire the men, you can not build the ships, and you can not fly in the air. The fundamental proposition is that the Army and the Navy must hold close to their base of supplies, and the National Treasury is the necessary base. You can not persuade the Army and the Navy officers to economize for the taxpayers of the United States and the National Treasury. You will never get economy along that line, but must get it in some other way.

I recognize that the committee bill rests upon a peace basis. Of course, a war basis would require a larger enlisted personnel. If, as some urge, 86,000 men is the correct number to reflect the maximum of the 5-5-3 treaty Navy, let that be incorporated into the law in a legislative bill. Then the appropriation bills on a peace basis, as they are ordinarily made, can apply practical economy, and under the legislative bill with a higher enlisted personnel the department can readily expand into war activities. This, in my judgment, would be the proper arrangement for the legislative bill on the one hand and the appropriation bill on the other.

The committee bill seems to be drawn with this principle in mind. It is the correct principle, especially at this time while our Treasury is struggling with financial burdens.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, June 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office, dated June 1, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 1, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between April 5 and May 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also inclosed herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the list of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Acting The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the list of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local board named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included, nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has since the publication of his name been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should for any of these reasons likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 3, CITY OF BIRMINGHAM, STATE OF ALABAMA.

965 Mathew Allen, 612 North Fifteenth Street, Birmingham, Ala.
2686 Lorenzo Anderson, 1430 Fifteenth Street, Birmingham, Ala.

Wipe Turkey Off the Map.

OF
HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,
OF GEORGIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, December 17, 1921.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9348) for the relief of the distressed and starving people of Russia.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as long as I keep my senses——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. How long? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. And my patriotism [applause] I never expect to vote for any measure that will take bread out of the mouth of any hungry American man, woman, or child, and if this bill did that I would not vote for it. But it does not do that. It is natural for us to think of home and to think of our own unemployed, and I declare myself heartily in favor of any and every measure that would tend to relieve the distress at home. But we face a condition and not a theory, as brought out strongly by the President in his address to the Congress. I love my State better than any other State. I love my section better than any other section. I love my country better than any other country, but I do not want to love my State or section or country so well as to make me forget to help any suffering, starving human being in all God's world. [Applause.] Naturally, we think of Armenia.

I wish Armenia could be included in this immediate help. We think of that whole section over there where starving millions are suffering and dying in a great waste of desolation. And do you know what I think? I really believe that this great conference for the world's peace, whose purposes I indorse, would add to its own self-respect, and also the respect of the world, if it were to determine before it breaks up to come together and take Turkey by the nape of the neck and declare to that nation, that has caused so much sorrow, horror, and hell among the civilized nations of the world, that they will wipe it off the face of the earth if it ever perpetrates any more barbarous cruelty upon the smaller nations round about that honor the cross and refuse to bow to the crescent of Mahomet.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I do.

Mr. McSWAIN. Suppose the world's disarmament that my friend is preaching about is established. How will you wipe Turkey off the face of the earth?

Mr. UPSHAW. Do it before they disarm. [Laughter and applause.] I want to say this——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield? I want to know—I am somewhat interested in this amendment—is the gentleman for or against the sending of the flour?

Mr. UPSHAW. Both. [Laughter.] That is, I am in favor of flour and grain.

Mr. BEGG. Somebody suggested this was a flour amendment and not a Turkey amendment.

Mr. UPSHAW. Well, I understand that, but I do not think the Turkey I am talking about will mix with any kind of flour. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one extra minute to make up for the time these genial gentlemen have just used. I declare this. Nothing I said in the oath I took at this patriotic shrine will keep me from voting for doing anything that I believe will add to the luster of America's name abroad and that will bring life, hope, and happiness to suffering humanity. [Applause.]

Reducing the Cost—The Time Is Now.

If we are ever going to reduce the cost of "the scientific destruction of human life," the time to begin is now.

OF
HON. WILLIAM D. UPSHAW,
OF GEORGIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 19, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, throughout this long debate the spirit, as the gentleman from Michigan said, has been strikingly beautiful on both sides. I have not spoken thus far, partly due to the fact that I have been ill for a part of the time, but I think it a good thing to remind the House in these closing moments of that immortal sentence uttered by the President of the United States in his notable speech at the disarmament conference. President Harding said:

There is something radically wrong with any system of civilization that spends the greater part of its money annually on the scientific destruction of human life.

I honor the high-class naval officers who have given the greater part of their lives to the study of this question. They have been unfailing in their courtesies to me in my every official conference with them.

Secretary Denby, a statesman in peace as well as a hero in war; Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, worthy son of an immortal sire; and Admiral Thomas Washington, the genial genius at the head of the Bureau of Navigation—all, all have proven that great officials can be great-hearted gentlemen at every angle of contact. But, honest as they are in their forceful contention for the larger Navy, I must be allowed the exercise of my privilege and my duty as a citizen and as a legislator to do some thinking and voting for myself. I honestly believe that the smaller Navy proposed for our suffrage is absolutely ample for our needs in peace and an ample nucleus for our larger activities in the event of war. Patrick Henry, with tongue of flame, declared:

Three million people, armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as this which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemies can send against us.

And I declare now that one hundred and ten millions of people, dedicating their patriotism to the threatened flag of our reunited country, will answer any time and anywhere our President's "call to the colors," without the necessity of our maintaining in peace a big Army and Navy with their staggering burden of expense. More than 90 cents out of every dollar of the people's money, spent to provide for the burdens of war—past, present, and to come—is an unthinkable anomaly in our boasted Christian civilization.

If we are ever going to act in consonance with the President's advice in his notable disarmament speech and reduce our investments in "the scientific destruction of human life," the time to begin is now! [Applause.]

Delinquent Internal Revenue Business—Commissioner Blair Asks for Ten Additional Collectors of Internal Revenue to Transact Business Belonging to Expert Accountants.

SPEECH
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. ANDREWS,
OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 4, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10877) to permit an increase in the number of internal revenue collection districts and in the number of collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to clear up delinquent work by appointing 10 additional collectors of internal revenue. I will venture the prediction that if you appoint 10 additional collectors of internal revenue, not one of them will do anything with the delinquent work now on the docket. What kind of service do you need to clear up that delinquent work? You need trained expert accountants to do that business.

Mr. MADDEN. Auditors. We have already given them 800.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That is true, and they said that would be enough. Now they want 10 additional full collection districts. Why, the district officer does not handle this work. In 1913 the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia cost $358,000.

The salary roll for 1921 cost nearly $12,000,000, and for the whole field service it cost $34,000,000. The act of 1918 provided for the collection of $6,000,000,000 in revenue for 1919, of $4,000,000,000 in 1920 and subsequent years. In 1921 we passed a law proposing a reduction of that amount by nearly a billion dollars. Why do we need an increase of 10 districts with only one-half the business?

Read the letter addressed by Secretary Mellon to the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means on April 18, 1922, in support of this bill. It seems to have been drafted with the deliberate purpose of deceiving the very elect. It says:

In 10 years the number of taxpayers filing returns with collectors of internal revenue has increased from less than 600,000 to an aggregate of more than 10,000,000 annually.

Another sentence in the report reads as follows:

The total number of transactions with the 10,652,704 taxpayers who filed returns in 1921 was then 20,000,000.

Another sentence reads as follows:

This remarkable increase in the number of people who have transactions with the collector's offices makes it appear imperative that the present number of collection districts be increased.

In regard to the cost of additional districts the Secretary says:

The establishment of 10 new collection districts would involve an additional annual expenditure of not to exceed $500,000.

It is manifest that Secretary Mellon did not make his usual critical examination of the two columns embodied in his letter under the years 1911 and 1921. The loose construction and the violent assumption embodied in this letter prove that Secretary Mellon did not write it. No man who has accumulated a fortune equal to his would ever be guilty of the gross oversight in this document. The letter surely originated in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and in all probability was submitted to him on carbon copy for signature and transmission to the committee.

At first sight we would assume that even Commissioner Blair would not make such a glaring mistake as this letter contains. Other communications from him, however, received over his signature in connection with controverted questions, make it possible to believe that he may have written it. The probabilities are that some clerk who wants to see 10 additional districts, drafted the letter and submitted it to the commissioner.

A careful reading of the letter shows that the year 1911 is compared with 1921 on the assumption that there was no increase of clerical force in the Bureau of Internal Revenue within those years. What are the material facts in this case?

The situation in 1911 was substantially the same as it was in 1913, and stood as follows: Number of employees in the Washington bureau on July 1, 1913, was 277, and on July 1, 1921, totaled 7,096. In the field service on July 1, 1913, the number of employees was 3,723, and on July 1, 1921, was 12,541, making a total of 4,000 in 1913 and of 19,637 in 1921. To this must be added 800 additional auditors since July 1, 1921, making 20,437.

The letter assumes that the clerical force of 4,000 for 1911 was performing all the service in 1921, while the facts show that the clerical force had been increased to 20,437. The Washington bureau on July 1, 1913, was carried at an expense of $357,231, but had increased in expenditure by July of 1921 to $11,582,550. The field service on July 1, 1913, was carried at an expense of $4,839,093, but in 1921 had increased to $22,048,331. The cost of the entire service in 1913 was $5,296,332, and in 1921 it was $33,630,881, with an additional appropriation for 800 additional employees made subsequent to 1921.

With such glaring errors as these, how can any reliance be placed upon the Secretary's report which, of course, originated with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? Unless the commissioner should ultimately develop the ability to make better deductions than these, how can he be relied upon to conduct the internal-revenue business of the United States of America? Why did not the commissioner give the committee and the House these facts? Did he assume that they would pass unnoticed?

With an increase of clerical force of 16,437 for 1923 over 1911, and with an increase in expenditures of $30,000,000 for 1923 over 1911, why should Commissioner Blair find it difficult to bring all branches of the internal-revenue business up to date and keep it there, especially in view of the fact that the total volume of business for 1923 will be reduced nearly one-half from the volume of business transacted in 1920? How can we refrain from thinking and saying that the demand for 10 additional districts at an annual expense of $500,000 is proof positive of maladministration and gross inefficiency?

This kind of a bill should be buried so deeply that it will never see daylight again. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM N. VAILE,
OF COLORADO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 24, 1922.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, "What's the Constitution between friends?" was the famous inquiry of a former well-known political boss, the owner of several powerful newspapers.

The intolerance of constitutional restraints is as old as the Constitution itself. Its manifestations have ranged from mere unwillingness to cooperate with the Government to actual violence, crime, sedition, and anarchy. The same spirit has overthrown many other Governments and accomplished the ruin of many peoples. It may conceivably overthrow our Government and ruin the American people, and the reason it has not yet done so is because all of our great national leaders from Washington to Harding have thought and have taught and the great majority of the American people still believe that respect for our own fundamental law is only the necessary self-respect without which the Nation can not possibly endure. If we should ever come to regard the Constitution of the United States as "a scrap of paper," the American Nation would be past saving, because it would not be worth saving.

Nevertheless it is still assumed by some people, who as good Americans ought to know better, that the Constitution may be disregarded—at least, "between friends"—and these people, when their own pleasures or desires are interfered with, actually feel very much aggrieved at the insistence that the Constitution is the most sacred human institution which we have. And, naturally enough, the question, "What is the Constitution between friends?" is often propounded to candidates for office.

It was propounded to me recently by Mr. C. J. Hyland, the editor of a Denver paper, the Liberty Press, as follows:

AN OPEN LETTER TO CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM N VAILE.

(By C. J. Hyland.)

It is generally understood that you are to be a candidate for renomination and reelection this year.

The Liberty Press has supported you in the past and is inclined, from motives of personal friendship and esteem, to support you again, but for your apparent tendency to disregard the wishes of your constituency by voting with the Prohibitionists against modification of the Volstead law, as was evidenced when the question of the use of beer for medicinal purposes was before Congress a few months ago.

You are probably aware that a large majority of the people of Denver favor the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer, and the Liberty Press reflects that sentiment as every honest newspaper should reflect the sentiment of its readers.

You, as a student of economics, must realize that the Volstead law, in its present form, has made and is continuing to make lawbreakers and criminals out of millions of otherwise law-abiding citizens, creating a wholesale disrespect for all law and developing in our people an appetite for strong spirituous liquors.

The people of Denver believe, and we believe, that this deplorable condition can be materially relieved by legalizing the use of light wines and beer. We feel that the welfare of our readers must be considered ahead of all other interests, and therefore wish you to understand that this paper stands first for the amendment of the Volstead law.

If you can and will support this policy in your future congressional work, Congressman VAILE, we are for you.

A lot of people who are otherwise law-abiding seem to think that the eighteenth amendment was not really meant to be observed. And some people who believe in prohibition believe in it with mental reservations. "It's a fine thing for Smith; it'll do him a lot of good; but it isn't really necessary to apply it to me." This is human nature, and, in fairness, this point of view was perhaps to be expected immediately following such a radical change to an entirely new system.

The hurt comes when we find that the law is being enforced, that its violation brings liability to punishment just the same as violation of other laws, and that it applies to ourselves as well as to the other fellow.

But the vitally important thing is that, as a part of our organic law, the eighteenth amendment is really the acid test of our ability to govern ourselves; that is to say, of our ability to abide by our own rules.

As soon as the foregoing publication was brought to my attention, I answered it as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1922.

Mr. C. J. HYLAND,
Editor the Liberty Press, Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR HYLAND: I greatly appreciate the friendship displayed in your open letter to me in the Liberty Press under date of March 11. You offer me, in the coming election, a continuation of your generous support, which I have always valued very highly, if I will return an affirmative answer to your question whether I will support an amendment to the Volstead Act legalizing light wines and beer.

Your question is entitled to a candid and categorical answer, and while I regret that the answer will deprive me of your support, I hope and believe that it will not deprive me of your friendship, a most pleasant one of many years' standing.

My answer is, No.

Friend Hyland, I have never pretended to be much of a saint, but I do have a very definite idea of the meaning of the obligation which I assumed when I took my oath of office. That oath was to support the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States says:

"The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, for beverage purposes, is hereby prohibited."

To amend the Volstead Act so as to declare that light wines and beer are not intoxicating would be an attempt—in my opinion, an unsuccessful attempt—at legislative camouflage which would deceive nobody. The very reason why light wines and beer are desired is because they are intoxicating. Of course, it will be immediately urged that they are only mildly intoxicating. It seems to me that it is useless to argue that point. Our Constitution makes no distinction between mildly intoxicating, somewhat intoxicating, and very intoxicating. The word used is "intoxicating," without any qualification whatever. Consequently I do not see how I could vote for something that is even "mildly intoxicating" without violating my oath of office.

You say that a large majority of the people of Denver favor the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer. Possibly so. You are on the ground, and better able to read their sentiment than I am, but they will simply have to elect a different Congressman if a vote for such an amendment to the Volstead law is to be cast from the first district of Colorado.

With warmest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM N. VAILE.

The foregoing letter I sent by the same mail to the Liberty Press and to other Denver papers, with the result that it was published in another paper before Mr. Hyland's paper went to press. I regret the seeming discourtesy which arises out of this circumstance, though I do not believe Mr. Hyland is disposed to complain. He was starting on a campaign of publicity against a Congressman who opposes the weakening of the Volstead law, and of course as an experienced newspaper man he would hardly protest if the object of his criticism welcomes and assists in the full and complete airing of the issue.

Immediately after the publication of my reply the Liberty Press published an editorial indorsing another man as a candidate, saying:

We need a man of Mr. ———'s caliber to represent us in Congress, a man who has the spine, and who is not afraid to express his convictions. Now is the time for the people at large to demand their choice. Don't let the foxy politician put it over.

I presume the gentleman referred to has expressed his conviction in favor of amending the Volstead law to permit light wines and beer. I presume I am inferentially referred to as a "foxy politician," though the language is general. I ought to say here that Mr. Hyland has always treated me personally with the utmost courtesy. Indeed, even after the publications referred to, he complimented me with a very generous editorial reference in connection with a report—entirely unfounded—that I was to be appointed to fill a vacancy on the Federal bench.

Well, if compliance with the plain mandate of the Constitution makes a man a "foxy politician," then I have earned the title.

The publication of Mr. Hyland's article, and of my reply, has resulted in a great deal of correspondence, some unfavorable, but mostly favorable, to my position in the matter. So far as I can tell from the tone of these letters and from some newspaper comment—which has been extremely generous to me—the great majority of the people of Denver and of Colorado as a whole most emphatically do not "favor the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer." If I am right in this estimate of the sentiment in my own community, the fact is of itself a remarkable testimonial to the substantial success of enforced prohibition, notwithstanding the too frequent violations of the law, because the city of Denver voted wet by a majority of 8,500 when state-wide prohibition was adopted in 1914—to be effective January 1, 1916—and had previously voted wet when the question was an issue. Subsequently, however, the city as well as the State voted against a change in the State law which would have legalized wine and beer, and if, as my correspondence would seem to indicate, the prevailing sentiment is now "dry," this means that it has become so, and has stayed so, during the actual operation of two years of State prohibition and three years of national prohibition.

Another Denver paper, the Leader, published by two stalwart American citizens of Italian extraction, Messrs. George and Fred Mangini, and with a clientele largely of Italian origin, said editorially:

The citizens of Colorado have made our State the boniest dry State in the country, and it would be unfair and un-American for anyone to expect Congressman VAILE to take any other stand. The Denver Leader will support Mr. VAILE in the coming election.

Inasmuch as the Italian people, a temperate nation, have long been accustomed to their light wines, this evidence of willing cooperation with our laws on the part of Italian-born citizens who must feel considerable inconvenience on account of the radical change in our laws, strikes me as a splendid example of patriotism which might well be emulated by some American-born citizens.

Among the hundreds of letters indorsing my position some come from outside my own State. A nice little old lady way up in the Catskills, 2,000 miles from my home town, sends me warm words of congratulation and encouragement.

Of course many of my letters come from church and temperance organizations, which, it may be said, would naturally be expected to approve the views which I have expressed. Let me respond that at least they are not actuated by any selfish motive, either of self-indulgence or of financial gain. Whether you agree with these folks or not, Mr. Anti-Eighteenth Amendment, you will have to absolve them from any but altruistic motives. They worked for prohibition and are now working to maintain it and make it effective, because they believe it is right and beneficial. Their interest is merely the interest of good citizens in the welfare of their country and their community. Does anyone doubt that the faithful women of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, who fought so many years for the defeat of alcohol, were actuated solely by a desire for the public good? I remember once seeing a parade of school children marching under a banner, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up!" Those children were mostly grown up by the time that prohibition became a constitutional reality. Now, do you think they were actuated by the hope of financial gain? On the other hand, what was the principal motive of those who fought so hard to prevent prohibition? If you take more than one guess you are not honest with yourself.

But my letters of indorsement are not all by any means from such organizations or their members. I have a splendid one from a veteran police sergeant who has seen the city from its toughest days to the present time, a typical "hard-boiled," straightforward, hard-fisted guardian of the peace, familiar, through years of professional contact, with all forms of misfortune, vice, and crime, a man who has long since learned to view mankind not perhaps without sentiment but at least without sentimentality. His letter is the strongest kind of an indorsement of prohibition, notwithstanding its incomplete enforcement, and is based upon his own concrete observation of its effects.

We wish to thank you for the manly and patriotic stand you took in the matter of that pernicious amendment permitting the use of "light wines and beer." Prohibition was adopted by a large vote in Colorado and in the United States, and any amendment that would weaken it would be an attack on the Federal Constitution. Please accept our admiration for your loyalty to the best institutions of our Government and for your reverence for "God and home and native land."

It seems to me that the country is still sound at its core when a post of Civil War veterans comes out like that in behalf of its country's laws—but, after all, that is only what you would expect of men who fought for their country.

Incidentally, did you ever hear of a post of the American Legion or the Veterans of Foreign Wars indorsing "light wines and beer" or any other evasion of the eighteenth amendment? Think over that question a little bit, if you are laboring under any delusion that prohibition was "slipped over" on the soldier boys while they were away. If these magnificent organizations of young veterans were really smarting under an outrageous fraud perpetrated upon them in their absence by their countrymen whom they were at that moment defending on the battle fields of Europe, do you suppose they would stand it without protest? It is not the nature of the American soldier to so placidly endure the infliction of a great wrong.

Of course, the plain and simple fact is that the Legion boys as a body do not feel that they were wronged in the least by the passage of the eighteenth amendment or the law for its enforcement. Incidentally, the Congress which voted to submit the amendment to the States was elected in the fall of 1916, before the United States had entered the war and before a single soldier was drafted. It certainly was an issue which was thoroughly discussed in that campaign. I ought to know. I was a candidate for Congress in that year.

The American soldiers in the World War were a horizontal cross-section of the American people. It is a fairly safe conclusion that they were not very far different in their views from the folks at home. The charge that prohibition was "slipped over" upon the soldiers is as pure bunkum as is the charge that it was the act of a minority of the people at home. That charge is so absurd that it would seem that it must be dismissed upon the very slightest reflection.

Consider the facts shown by the record. All that the "wets" had to do to prevent prohibition was, in the first place, to secure the votes of one-third of either House of Congress. They could not do that, and consequently the amendment was submitted by the votes of more than two-thirds of both the House and the Senate. When it came to the State ratifications all that the "wets" had to do was to obtain a bare majority in either branch of only 13 State legislatures. Advocates of the amendment had to obtain both houses, 72 in all, in 30 States. How sadly the opponents of prohibition fell down is shown by the fact that in less than a year and a half the amendment was favorably voted on by 92 out of the 96 houses of the 48 legislatures of the country, and only 4 houses out of the entire 96 voted against it.

No political party in the history of the country ever polled such a tremendous majority on any issue. Of conrse, it may be assumed that the great majority of people who voted for legislative candidates favorable to prohibition were not themselves total abstainers. They voted for prohibition, nevertheless, in the conviction that the country would be better off without liquor.

In view of the overwhelming figures, the man who asserts that prohibition was "put over" by a minority has a brain that is either dead or sound asleep.

Such, with all due respect to its owner, and in the sincere hope that it may yet be revived, is the brain of one of my constituents who most emphatically does not favor me or my views. The gentleman courts publicity, and, in fact, I promised him publicity, but I have concluded to at least postpone complete performance of my promise by withholding his name. Possibly he may decide to be a candidate for office after he has seen the light, and I do not wish to embarrass him in the future.

I may perhaps be allowed to determine the degree of publicity, since I am paying for it myself. Contrary to the general impression, reprints from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are not paid for by Uncle Sam. They are charged, at about the ordinary commercial rate, to the Congressman who orders them, and this one is therefore paid for by me out of my salary.

DENVER, COLO., April 5, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM N. VAILE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VAILE: Your most recent public statement in Denver papers opposing the repeal or modification of the Volstead Act to permit the sale of light wines and beers under Government supervision is receiving considerable comment throughout Colorado. You say you would violate your oath of office. There could be no greater violation of the office than to ignore the wishes of the majority to repeal any law or any part of our Constitution that is detrimental to the life, welfare, and happiness of the people, and this is the existing condition resulting from the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act.

The enforcement agents in Denver most recently caught 48 violators selling vile, homemade moonshine in one day, and almost every day from one to a dozen violators of the prohibition law are fined in the fair city which you represent. This is more than tenfold the amount of drunkard violators than when the city was wet and had open saloons, which are undesirable and should be eliminated.

Do you think if we had pure wines and beers under Government supervision the people would buy this vile moonshine and homemade concoctions that have destroyed more lives than were lost by American armies during the Great World War? And this destruction is the result of two years of national prohibition and six years of dry laws in Colorado. Since the bone-dry law invoked by the Colorado State Legislature you have more inmates in the city jail in Denver and the penitentiary at Canon City and more than 12 per cent increase in two years in the insane asylums, which is the greatest ever known in the history of the Commonwealth of Colorado when it was wet from every corner to the center. Taxes have increased over 250 per cent in the last six years, and we have increased the police force of Denver after six years of dry reign and find we have not sufficient funds to pay for this necessary increased police protection, and notably the Colorado rangers and constabulary officers, which are costing the taxpayers hundreds of thousands of dollars to check the increase of crime. Any Member of Congress or the Senate who comes out for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment or the modification of the Volstead Act will find a majority support throughout the country, with the exception of a few radical congressional districts, which do not exist in Colorado. I am a Republican voter and will not support you and your platform, nor will hundreds of other business men in Denver. You disregarded the wishes of the majority, as prohibition was put over on the people by a well-organized 10 per cent of the population of America and was financed by a big interest which is reaping a harvest at the expense of the taxpayers and to the detriment of the people throughout the Nation.

As this letter is in the interest of the taxpayers' welfare and happiness of the people, it is public.

Yours very truly,

Mr. ———.

DEAR MR. ———: I have yours of the 5th inst., and while it is, of course, a matter of sincere regret to me that I have lost your support, I must say that I would rather lose your vote than have you cast it for me under any misapprehension as to my position.

I am anxious for reelection, I conscientiously feel that I have earned reelection, and I believe I can serve my constituents better than a new man, but I do not care to be reelected as a "gum-shoe" candidate.

Permit me to express the hope that you will demand from other candidates that they make statements of their attitude on prohibition which will be as definite as my own. You will doubtless concede the fairness of this request. In view of your own frankness on this subject I can not conceive that you would deny your support to me for stating categorically that I will not vote for a light wines and beer amendment to the Volstead Act, and at the same time give your vote to another candidate who fails to declare, unequivocally, that he will vote for such an amendment.

It appears that this proposition is to be made an issue in the next campaign. Very well. All I ask is that all candidates come out in the open on it. I have done so. I shall see that the others do the same or appear before the public as unwilling to stand the gaff resulting from a frank declaration.

I shall give your letter the publicity which you so candidly court for it, and will let such publicity be shared by this reply.

Whether I stay in Congress or not, I am not going to apologize to any man for supporting the Constitution of the United States.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM N. VAILE.

The gentleman has indeed a poor opinion of his fellow countrymen if he really thinks that 10 per cent of the population of America secured the votes of two-thirds of the Members of each House of Congress and 95 per cent of the houses of the State legislatures. He shows a lack of appreciation of the greatest economic disaster in history when he expresses surprise that we have had a great increase of taxation in the last six years. The fact that we have been through a war which added a little trifle of twenty-five billions to our national debt evidently spells nothing to him. He is, of course, correct when he refers to the sale of much vile moonshine liquor, but he is also correct when he calls attention to the fact that its makers and sellers are being arrested and convicted by the diligent and patriotic law-enforcement officers, State and Federal, who operate in Colorado.

On his statement that there is an increase in crime he is just about as correct as when he says that the amendment was "put over" by a 10 per cent minority. The year 1914 had 28 deaths from alcoholism reported by the Denver city physician; 1915 was nearly the same, the number being 25. In 1916, the first year of State prohibition, the number sank to 11, or less than half. In 1917 it was 8; in 1918, 6; and in 1919, only 1. Notwithstanding the wood-alcohol concoctions, which no doubt are still occasionally sold to the people who are foolish enough to buy them, deaths from alcoholism are now rare indeed in Denver.

Crime of all sorts diminished in volume throughout the State, from 13,769 in 1915, to 10,045 in 1916; 9,643 in 1919; and less than 9,000 in 1921, notwithstanding an increase in population, and crime in Colorado is still on the decrease.

The Denver City Bureau of Charities and Corrections reports that in the year following the adoption of State-wide prohibition the number of families asking relief from the city office was about a hundred a month less than for the corresponding months in 1915. Even during the unemployment stress of last year the number of applicants for city charity was less than prior to the advent of prohibition.

My friend should have consulted available sources of information before making such wild statements as he sets up in his letter.

Since the foregoing correspondence was written a tragic event has taken place in the newspaper world in Colorado.

The Durango Democrat was one of the few papers in the State which was continuing the fight against the dry law. Of course, the circumstance that it was a Democratic paper is merely fortuitous. Prohibition in Colorado has not been a party issue. A bitter controversy arose between Rod S. Day, the proprietor of the Democrat, and William L. Wood, city editor of the Durango Herald, who strongly supported the eighteenth amendment. The two men met on the street, Wood, according to newspaper reports, being unarmed. Day, it is alleged, struck Wood with a carpenter's rule and then leveled a pistol at him. Wood, according to an eye-witness, threw his arms over his face and turned his back, Day pulling the trigger while his victim was shrinking from the expected shot. Wood's brilliant young life was snuffed out. He was only 35 years old. His girl wife is now a widow and his child will be an orphan without ever having seen its father. Day, one of the most popular and picturesque newspaper characters in the West, is branded with the mark of Cain, and will probably spend the rest of his life behind prison bars.

Was the fight for liquor worth this to Rod S. Day? Was it worth it to the town of Durango? Perhaps my correspondent last quoted would claim that this crime was due to the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law. In a sense it was, but was the law to blame?

Let's all quit blaming the law and put the blame where it belongs, on the people who violate it and the people who fight it—on ourselves, if the blame fits us.

What we need is not a new law but a new backbone, a little bit of old-fashioned conscience, and an American sense of obligation to the laws which we ourselves have made.

OF

HON. THOMAS U. SISSON,

OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 12, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10972) to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Take section 3, in reference to the National Guard. What is the estimated cost of the increased pay given to the National Guard officers in section 3?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not know that we have any estimate. It is very difficult to make an estimate.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that to be true, but I thought, perhaps, the gentleman had had some figures made for him on the subject.

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

Mr. SISSON. Because, dealing, as he does here, solely with grades, of course you would have to know the number in each grade and the number in the National Guard and the number falling in a particular class.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Mississippi understands that now, under the law, there are a few National Guard officers who may be called into the Militia Bureau and the General Staff.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that.

Mr. McKENZIE. And they would be entitled to count whatever little service they may have had for longevity pay on that; but the purpose of this is to have it written into the law so that in case of war and the National Guard is called in, they will draw the pay they drew in the last war without any legislation.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that from the section also, and I am anxious to know how it affects the peace status of the whole National Guard.

Mr. McKENZIE. From a financial standpoint?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I doubt if it will make any particular change—very little.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, if I may discuss generally for a moment the bill, it is all so much like section 3 that even the Army officers themselves can not tell you what this bill is going to cost. I did not give the bill any study until yesterday. I have talked to some of the officers, and the very complication of this bill is such that I doubt whether there is a man in the House who can figure out what an officer's pay will be. The trouble with the bill, so far as it appeals to my mind is concerned, is that to vote for it is very much like voting for a pig in a sack. You do not know where you are going to come out, and you do not know what is in the sack.

Now, let me illustrate. I got the assistance of an officer, whose name I shall not mention, and when I asked him about the comparison between this bill and its effect upon the Treasury and the bill of 1908, he said that there was no basis of comparison. I talked with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] this morning, and he corroborates the officer's statement that the whole system is changed, so that you can not get a basis of comparison. I said to the officer, "Let me suggest this to you: Suppose we take a major. Can not you tell me what a major's maximum pay is under this bill, and what a major's maximum pay would be under the bill of 1908, which was in force up to the breaking out of the war?" "Well," he said, "yes; I can do that," and he made the figures for me. Now, according to his figures, the maximum pay, under the 1908 law, of a major, including longevity pay, commutation of quarters, heat, and light, was four thousand seven hundred and some odd dollars, not quite $5,000. Under this bill, in American service, not foreign service, the limit is $7,200. Now, if that is true and that rule applies to all the officers in the bill, and this bill increases the pay which was prevalent up until 1920—that is, the old 1908 law—then every officer in the major class would finally reach a maximum pay of four thousand nine hundred and odd——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? I think that is only a bare possibility under this bill, and for this reason—that while the man is waiting for promotion before he gets in the higher grade we provide he shall get longevity pay, and in any number of years he might possibly go up to that. But that is theoretical, purely.

Mr. SISSON. I am trying, if possible, to strip the question of all "ifs" and "ands" and "conditions," so as to tell what it will cost the taxpayer as compared with the law of 1908.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask that I may have five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. But to take a concrete illustration: The maximum pay that a major would get under the old law was four thousand nine hundred and odd dollars. The maximum pay under this bill of the same officer staying in this country is $7,200. I asked if we take all of these men and run them down would that ratio be preserved. He said, "I think so." Now, this very anomalous thing appears in this bill. It is made up of longevities to such an extent that a captain with about 20 years' service will get more pay than a major with 10 years' service. There is not one of you gentlemen here, I do not believe there is a single member of this committee who can tell you what an officer's salary will be. Take the majors. How much are you going to appropriate for majors? You have to take the matter out and figure it out, and the difficulty is you can not tell how many you are going to——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit.

Mr. SISSON. I have not much time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not desire to trespass upon the gentleman's time, but the gentleman is talking about a captain of 20 years getting more money than a major of 10 years' service. That can only apply to one class of captains, who perhaps ought not to be in there at all, and that is the Medical Department Corps, where there is no grade above captain and where men may stay for 25 or 40 years in the grade of captain.

Mr. SISSON. I have not had time to take and study this, but I am calling attention to these things that appear to me, and in so far as my investigation goes if you trace it down we are getting into a very bad box here.

A MEMBER. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. SISSON. Vote this bill down. That is the way to do it. I have talked to Members of Congress about it, and I find that Members of Congress do not know what they are doing, and I am glad to have backing like my good friend over here, because he is a legislator. I know it because I have served on committees with him. I am glad to have company like that. I am going to ask permission here to put in the RECORD a table showing the entrance pay of the various officers and their grades under the 1908 law and their maximum pay, and insert in the RECORD a comparative statement showing the base pay of each entrance grade in this bill and the maximum pay under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the material indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The maximum pay of a second lieutenant under the act of May 11, 1908, was $3,079.90. The maximum pay of a second lieutenant under the proposed bill is $4,258.

The maximum pay of a first lieutenant under the act of May 11, 1908, was $3,739.85. The maximum pay of a first lieutenant under the proposed bill is $5,118.

The maximum pay of a captain under the act of May 11, 1908, was $4,547.50. The maximum pay of a captain under the proposed bill is $6,507.

The maximum pay of a major under the act of May 11, 1908, was $5,439.65. The maximum pay of a major under the proposed bill is $7,200.

The maximum pay of a lieutenant colonel under the act of May 11, 1908, was $6,174.30. The maximum pay under the proposed bill is $7,200.

The maximum pay of a colonel under the act of May 11, 1908, was $6,907.00. The maximum pay of a colonel under the proposed bill is $7,200.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee will at once see that with several thousand officers of the grades just mentioned, this bill, if passed, will cost the Government several million dollars more for the same number of officers than did the law of 1908. But this is not the whole story. Promotions made during the war were very rapid, and this bill crystallizes these promotions, which ought to be temporary, into permanent promotions, and that costs the taxpayer many millions more than it should. In addition to that there are many officers who were taken into the Army from private life who were rapidly promoted to the high grades, and they are also cared for and made permanent at the high salaries under this proposed legislation.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, for the reasons I have stated, and many more, I would have to know a great deal more about this bill than I know now to vote for it, and if my investigation in the future shows those things as objectionable as I have found from my investigation since I have had the time to go into the bill, my objection will continue to grow against this bill.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, why is it that not one word has been said, so far as I have heard, in this debate comparing the pay in this bill with the 1908 law? All of the comparison has been made with the 1920 law, and the 1920 law is so bad that even the Army officers themselves know that Congress would not stand by the provisions of that law. But the principal objection to this bill is this, that all of these rapid promotions that the officer got during the war are preserved and crystallized in this bill. Where a young man had served 20 or 30 years, as the case may be, to reach a certain grade, these men have reached it within a very few years. They are now getting the pay under the present law—and that is the objection—of the man who served 20 or 30 years in the service. Now they are endeavoring to hold on to these war salaries and make them a permanent burden upon the back of the taxpayer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. They have put the brakes on him now, and hold him at his present pay in the advance grade until he has served as long as the fellow who gets the increased pay under the terms of this bill. Now, there is some fairness in that if you accept the principle of longevity. I am not going to discuss that, because it involves too many questions. But this feature of the bill I do not like, that instead of permitting these officers to go back to the grade they would have had prior to the war, plus whatever natural promotion they would have had under the law for the additional number of years' service, it lets them go back, unless by act of Congress they have been promoted to certain grades by virtue of most meritorious conduct. I am unwilling to say that I will promote every man to a higher grade as an officer solely because he serves well as an Army officer. I would be just as sure to give the advancement to the private who did his duty as to the Army officer who did his duty, and since you can not help the private I am willing to say to the officer that we are going to give him a promotion that was necessary under war conditions because of the rapid growth, and say that a second lieutenant would be a colonel or a colonel would be a captain. When the war was over, instead of permitting these men to go back to the original status where they belong, you have crystallized them here, not under their old salaries that they would have had under their old grade, but you have added something like 20 per cent more than that if the rule prevails that prevails with a major, which has been the one officer that I have been able to trace from the beginning until he goes out. So I am utterly unwilling to support the bill as it is at present.

OF

HON. EDWARD B. ALMON,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 1, 1922.

The House had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11131) to authorize the appropriation of additional sums for Federal aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, no nation can be really great and prosperous without three successful means of transportation—by rail, by water, and by highway. [Applause.] Now above all times in the history of our Nation it is important that we have an improved highway system. The railroads have not been able to handle the business of the country. They need the cooperation and assistance of the waterways and the highways. I have always been in favor of national aid to roads, and if I represented a city district I should favor national aid to roads, because anything that improves country conditions and makes the farmers more prosperous is in the interest of the cities. If it was not for the farm the grass would grow up in the streets of the cities. If it had not been for the farms of the West we would not have had a Kansas City, a Chicago, or a St. Louis. Every man who is in favor of national aid for roads ought to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

The first Federal appropriation for roads was made by Congress in 1916. The appropriations up to this time, not including the amount authorized in this bill, amount to about $340,000,000. Of this amount about $7,500,000 has heretofore been allotted to the State of Alabama. Alabama's part of the amount authorized in this bill amounts to $2,896,715. This will make available for road construction in Alabama $6,873,387 Federal funds between now and July 1, 1924, which does not include the amounts now under contract. When this amount is matched by the State, it will amount to $13,746,774.

So we are justified in the hope that from now on there will be great progress made in road construction with Federal aid as an adopted policy of our Government.

It has been thoroughly demonstrated by history that no country has made any great progress in road construction except where the Government has aided their construction and maintenance.

There has been for many years a tendency on the part of the people to leave the farms and go to the towns and cities. Much of this was due to bad roads. With good roads, rural mail delivery, telephones, good schoolhouses, and churches would make country life more desirable and attractive and will have a tendency to stop this movement from the country to the towns and cities.

It is useless for me to make reference at this time to the many, many advantages of good roads. This is well known to everyone. I have been a member of the Committee on Roads since 1915 and have taken a special interest in helping to prepare road legislation and secure liberal appropriations by Congress, realizing its great importance to all the people in the States. Federal aid for roads encourages the States and localities in raising road funds and cooperating with the Federal Government in the construction of the public roads. I shall continue my efforts as long as I am a Member of the House in securing the very largest possible appropriations for road construction and do all that I can to hasten the completion of all our roads. Then the people in all parts of every county in the United States will be given the advantage of good roads over which to travel. [Applause.]

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 5, 1922.

The House, as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10432) to amend an act entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those Islands," approved August 29, 1916, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 21, 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] has undertaken to present to this House some of the difficulties which lie in the way of permanent immigration legislation. He deserves thanks for the work that he has done in looking up treaty relations and in showing that simply because there is a cry for the complete suspension of immigration, or a cry for selection of immigrants and distribution in this country, that these things can not quite be done by law in the short and quick method that some people think.

The question has been frequently asked on this floor during the last few months, each time we have brought in some immigration measure on an amendment, as to when we might expect permanent immigration legislation.

Many persons wonder why the percentage restriction law has not been tightened up and made more binding. Some ask why Congress has not enacted a law completely suspending immigration for a period of years. Let me remind all of these questioners that it took more than 25 years of continuous effort to get a law even as restrictive as the 3 per cent act.

Each and every bill designed really to restrict immigration passed by Senate and House from the first days of the administration of Grover Cleveland to the last days of the administration of Woodrow Wilson was vetoed for some reason or other, usually because the proposed law interfered with that nonsensical notion that the United States was always to be the asylum for the oppressed of the world

The right to ask these questions is unquestioned. But let me in return ask the Members a question or two.

What plan of permanent immigration legislation do you prefer?

Will you have a suspension of all immigration, or will you have a permanent immigration act which is highly restrictive?

Probably that is what the great majority of the people want. If so, then what degree of restriction and what method?

I think we all who have given any extensive consideration to the subject in recent years will decide that for the purpose of restriction nothing can be better than a percentage plan somewhat similar to the one we have experimented with now for nearly one year, and which we have just extended for two years more.

In my opinion the act limiting immigration to 355,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30 came in the nick of time. It has saved the United States in that year from an influx of fully 1,500,000 immigrants at a time when we could neither assimilate nor employ them. When the year is up we will find that less than 250,000 immigrants have been admitted, including 2,800 or 2,900 who have been admitted temporarily for reasons of humanity and because of difficulties in getting the new law into operation. A total of 1,446 have been turned back because of exhausted quotas. Debarred for all causes in about 10 months were 11,066, which, I believe, is the record, and is still not enough. Too many demented, decrepit, and defective are being admitted.

The 3 per cent act ended the asylum idea just in time to prevent the United States from becoming the almshouse of the world—many of the alien inmates would like to run the asylum—and I desire to give full credit to the members of the House Immigration Committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, for sticking firmly to the idea of restriction, and for forcing forward a bill which, although pronounced dead, refused to die until it was superseded by the Dillingham act, which both Houses passed and which President Harding promptly signed.

We now have the 3 per cent act extended for two years from July 1. For one year it has worked well in enforcing restriction, in spite of needed perfecting amendments. Therefore, I am of the opinion that permanent restrictive immigration legislation should be based on the percentage-restriction plan, with the efforts of the committee devoted to perfecting the plan. I believe Congress would be justified in amending the law so as to give all countries a base quota of about 600, and in addition thereto not to exceed 2 per cent of the number of aliens in the United States as shown by the census of 1910. That would lessen the difficulties arising from small quotas now given to certain countries, and would decrease the large quotas awarded to other countries.

I believe that all quotas should consist only of persons eligible to citizenship under our present naturalization laws. An amendment to that effect would end the difficulties which arise from our "gentleman's agreement" with Japan. There is no reason why we should admit to become residents of the United States persons who never can become citizens of the United States.

Legislative difficulties which stood in the way this summer are clearing up, and if it is the view of the members of the committee, as it is of mine, that the percentage plan is the true plan, it will be easy, in my opinion, to make these perfecting amendments, and certain others, so that we may give to the country at the beginning of the winter session of this Congress a permanent immigration act.

Mr. BOX. I would like to ask the gentleman how he would regard any legislation, administrative or otherwise, that would tend to take the dealing with this problem from the hands of Congress acting through its legislative committee, the House Committee on Immigration?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will answer the gentleman by saying I am in full accord with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who stated over and over again at the recent Limitation of Arms Conference that the regulation of immigration is a matter of our own concern, regardless of treaties; that it is our matter. We have no desire to build a wall around the United States and say that no new person whatever shall come, whether relative, visitor, or otherwise, but we must, as we consider or discuss the whole question, make sure of the future of our own country, and be certain of the rights of our children and grandchildren. Otherwise posterity may have cause to bring a very serious charge against us.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is, whether the committee is giving consideration to the much-talked-of matter of registration of immigrants after they have reached this side?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. I want to discuss the difficulties that arise from the fact that proposed transportation, legislation, and all treaties run to and involve immigration. The gentleman asked awhile ago why we did not make speed. That is one of the reasons.

Now, as to registration, I am firmly of the opinion the aliens who come to the United States hereafter should arrive with a certificate showing thereon complete information concerning that alien. As to those aliens now in the country and not even in the first process of naturalization, I think we would do well to change the plan of naturalization. My mind is open concerning the plan of registration. I am in doubt as to whether a law for compulsory registration can be enforced or not. It certainly should not be enforced as a process leading on to enforced citizenship. That being the case, I can hardly see why we should proceed with the making of a law that would enforce registration on the person who is not likely or might not desire to come into citizenship. Further, enforced registration for a fee, without a sufficient penalty, would be meaningless and with a sufficient penalty would lead to the trouble of collection and enforcement, with great danger of failure. So that is a question which is still open.

I think, however, that a great majority of the alien population now in the United States are willing to accept the voluntary registration system. I think they misunderstand the proposal, and that they are being misinformed by the foreign-language press. I think they are reading the bill as if it were designed to force them to do this, or to do that, willy-nilly—to go to night school and learn to read English. Not so; they may remain untutored until doomsday if they choose. They may continue to speak Hottentot and not know a word of English. But we can and should and must provide in our naturalization laws that those persons whom we are willing to make actual citizens of the United States shall, when they become citizens, know enough English to be able to read the election ticket that has your name or mine on it. [Applause.] That is the point. As we progress with the restriction of immigrants, and when we shall require them not to start from the old country without a proper certificate, the undesirable kind will not get a chance to make the start for the United States, and we will all be better off.

I hold the firm belief that the United States will never go back to any scheme that will welcome the uncounted millions of the four corners of the world to our young new country, which in less than 140 years has raced through billions of acres, which has handled its resources as if they were inexhaustible, so that now fathers and mothers are lying awake nights wondering what is to become of their children.

Armenia During and Since the War.

OF
HON. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
OF KANSAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, December 17, 1921.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the soldiers and statesmen of our country in the past have found ample authority in the Constitution for doing good, the same as we are doing to-day. I commend to you their reasons and their statements and their opinions. Perhaps it is an appeal to Seward's Higher Law on which they based such aid as we vote to the dying millions of Russia by this bill. I have known instances where relief has been asked and where no one has objected. We are all interested in those people, and I suggest to gentlemen to follow that plan to-day.

But it is not my purpose to-day to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of this proposition. That has been settled in the past. I want to direct your attention for a moment particularly to one feature of the possibilities of this legislation. When President Wilson was in Europe he cabled to this country, asking for $100,000,000 to be expended for the relief of the poor of Europe. This came up January 13, 1919, on page 1372 of the RECORD. I offered an amendment to include Armenia in that relief, and it went through, and the people of Armenia received considerable relief. It is true that the Committee on Foreign Affairs adroitly changed Armenia to "the sections contiguous to Europe," and thus prevented any recognition of Armenia by our Government, and thus encouraged the Turks to continue the massacres and caused the death of thousands of Armenians. But this safeguarded the Turkish Empire and its bonds intact for Paris, London, and New York. Over in the Committee on Military Affairs they were working the other day upon a bill to use $4,000,000 worth of military supplies in this Russian territory. We directed their attention to the necessities of Armenia and asked that Armenia be included, and it was done, and you will find that in that same resolution.

I ask this House to make the same change in this bill in order that the same result may be achieved now. The Volga region is poor, but everything that has been happening in the Volga region this year has been happening for at least two years and is continuing also in Armenia. The Turkish and Russian Governments took not only one-third of their crops, but all that they could find. They have exhausted their resources. A million and a half people, half a million of whom are refugees, have gone in there. Their seed crops have failed. God Almighty seems to have forgotten Armenia. I think it is time for a Christian Congress and a Christian country to do something for them.

This is not an appeal for charity. This is a request that you do justice to your allies and pay your debts. You are not only the custodian of the pocketbook of the American people but the custodian of the honor of the American people as well. From the last great war just one single, solitary people emerged from the contest free as a result of their own exertions and has finally triumphed and won their liberty on the battle field unaided and unassisted. That people is the people of Armenia. The men of that country, per capita, did more to make this war a success than any other people. They did more fighting per capita, they secured more results per capita, than the men of any other race or nation.

In that great maze of circumstances over there it seems we have lost track of them. You must remember that when the armistice was signed Armenia was a free Republic, with 30,000 square miles of territory, having 2,000,000 people, collecting their taxes, and conducting their government with good results. You must remember that from November, 1917, to December, 1920, not one Russian soldier had been in their country. You must remember that between 1917 and 1920 not one Turkish soldier invaded Armenia. On the battle field of Sardarabad 20,000 Armenians fought with courage and bravery, pushed to within 20 miles of the Armenian capital, and vanquished the Turks at the base of Mount Ararat. They sent out a proclamation stating that the army was without cartridges and without bread, and the women appeared in there with their cartridges, and for 40 days they fought side by side with the men against the Bolshevik Russians. On the 28th of May they declared their independence, and in June they had established themselves in their own government. We did not know or realize what they had done for us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by order of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. And I commend to your kindly consideration the Armenians who beat Ludendorff's drive when these Armenians held the oil fields of Baku, deprived the Kaiser of gasoline, fought the Turks to a standstill at Sardarabad, and helped Allenby beat the Turks. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this bill is to authorize an appropriation to help the starving Russians. The purpose of my amendment is to require that a portion of this fund be sent to the starving Armenians, who are fully as destitute as the people on the Volga and who have been our friends and allies in all the mighty struggle, and to whom we are indebted beyond measure for military achievements of the highest value.

If Armenia is a part of the Russian Soviet's territory technically, they come under this bill just the same as the Volga does. If it is not and somebody with the fear of God in his heart, a feeling of common decency in his mind, and a desire to give the Armenians some help in their hour of need can just withhold a point of order the amendment can be put through and the Armenians saved for the hour at least. Furthermore, when the Turks find that Uncle Sam has his eye on Armenia and intends to assist her the Turkish massacres will stop. For a number of years I have been fighting for the recognition of Armenia on this floor with motions that were headed off by points of order only, and these points of order which deprived Armenia of a recognition by this country that would have enabled her to maintain her country against the Turks, have been responsible for the death of a million men and women in the hills and on the plains of that first Christian country. If a point of order is withheld here we can right now get a chance to assist the people who have done so much to help win the war.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been settled before. The gentleman from Pennsylvania gets up and makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane. He gives no reason for it. About three years ago this matter came up, when the present occupant of the chair was probably in the House. A resolution similar to this was presented, to authorize the expenditure by the President in Europe of $100,000,000 for the poor of Europe. I presented an amendment, to which the gentleman in charge of the bill, Mr. Sherley, very strenuously objected; that amendment giving aid also to Armenia. It was practically the same amendment that I have presented here. As I say, the gentleman in charge of that bill very strenuously objected to my amendment and it was discussed from a good many angles. It was finally decided that it was entitled to go into the bill, and it went in. This was done January 13, 1919, as I said awhile ago here. There was a slight change in the wording of the resolution. Originally it provided for the poor of Europe. Armenia is in Asia, and it was finally amended to read "Europe and contiguous territory."

I take it that decision is decisive of the situation here. If the gentleman has any reason for upsetting what was decided there, I shall be glad to hear it, and I should hate to feel that an ancient, settled, and decided proposition like that was overruled without any reason. If the gentleman has anything to say about it, I may want to discuss it further; but the precedent is on my side, and there is no reason on earth why it should not be sustained.

At that time, January 13, 1919, the gentleman from Kansas presented to the House the reasons why he thought a part of the $100,000,000 President Wilson was to spend in Europe for the poor should go to Armenia. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] had charge of the resolution, and he, after vigorously opposing the change, made to the gentleman from Kansas the suggestion that the Kansan permit the word "Armenia" to be stricken out and the words "territory contiguous in Asia" inserted. The feeling of the House was for Armenia, and that resolution should have been made to recognize Armenia's existence that day, and that would have saved the lives of thousands of people afterwards murdered by the Turks. The gentleman from Kansas was so earnestly desirous of succoring the starved Armenians that he did not take into consideration the other side of the situation, and he agreed to let "Armenia" be superseded by "contiguous territory in Asia," and several millions of that money was actually expended in Armenia, to their great benefit.

On January 7, 1919 (RECORD, 1108), Mr. Sherley presented the resolution for spending $100,000,000 in Europe for the poor, and asked for unanimous consent for considering it immediately. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] said:

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice this relief is confined entirely to Europe. There are several million Armenian Christians on the borders of Europe. How does it happen that they are not included in this measure?

Mr. SHERLEY. The request that came by virtue of the cable from the President to the Secretary of the Treasury, and which is found in House Document 1640, confined it to Europe.

Mr. LITTLE. Would not the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations accept and agree to an amendment including Armenia?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not feel warranted at this time to announce that I would accept such an amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman from Kentucky will modify his request so as to afford an opportunity for amendment, I will not object; but if he will not, I shall object.

On January 13 this resolution did come up, and the gentleman from Kansas offered the amendment to include Armenia, with the result already stated, and securing the words "contiguous territory in Asia."

In the time between January 6 and January 13 a cable was sent to Europe inquiring whether the change could be made to include Armenia by that name, and the answer was "No." The effect of all this was to prevent the Congress of the United States from saying a word to acknowledge the independence of Armenia, and a word then would have saved a million of Armenian lives then and since.

AFTER SUBSEQUENT DEBATE.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to be heard for a moment. Was that rule followed in the Sixty-sixth Congress?

Mr. TEMPLE. I am not at all responsible for the rulings of the Speaker of a former Congress. I am only calling attention to the rule.

Mr. LITTLE. The rule was the same at the time this other action was taken. Nobody at that time seriously considered following it along this line. I want to ask the gentleman another question right here, by the way: Is Armenia considered a part of Russia under this bill?

Mr. TEMPLE. That is not a question for me to decide, and I do not think it is pertinent to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. LITTLE. Very well, if Armenia is a part of Russia, then it is the same subject, and the gentleman can not suggest then that his rule applies, because it would be simply a part. Somebody says it is not necessary. If it is not necessary and does not make any change, for Heaven's sake what is the objection?

Now, let us go a step further. Let us look at the principle involved. There are two ways of looking at all legislation. One is a broad interpretation and the other is a narrow interpretation of the rule to be applied. We know that the courts in a certain line of cases have adopted a very broad construction of the Constitution itself. Now, you can not say, as the gentleman evidently means, although he has not said so yet, that this is simply a bill to help the suffering people of the Volga. That is true to some extent as it stands now, perhaps, but it is also true that this is a bill to help suffering in the Orient. Now, if a man is narrow enough between the eyes so that he wants to take a constricted view of it he can say, of course, that there is nobody hungry except the people in the Volga, and that it was not the intention of this bill to help anybody else. If he is a broad, generous, liberal-minded man, he can just as easily interpret it to mean that it is for the relief of hunger and suffering among those who fought and died for this Republic as well as for civilization in Armenia. [Applause.]

From the 6th day of January, 1919, when this $100,000,000 helping resolution was offered to the House, until this day, they have been successful in preventing the Congress of the United States from giving to the Republic of Armenia any technical and legal recognition that would have put that little Republic on its feet to face the world and the Turks, except the other day, when we did induce the Committee on Military Affairs to include a somewhat lame and halting reference to Russian Armenia in the bill with regard to a certain $4,000,000 worth of American supplies now on hand, and it is evidently the purpose of those in charge of this bill that not that much of a recognition shall go into it if a point of order has its old-time efficiency to assist the Turks in their campaigns of slaughter and destruction of the first Christian nation. A point of order has murdered more Armenians in the last five years than the Turks butchered in the nineteenth century.

This point of order has no strength; it is entirely without force. The Russians are holding Armenia as a part of their great nation. The bill is to help the folks of that nation, and the lights of Armenian liberty have flickered out and there is only a Soviet tallow candle shining in Erivan, the Armenian capital. Under this bill to expend this money in Russia the administration will be authorized to spend it in Russian Armenia and, if they have any bowels of compassion, will undoubtedly do so eventually. The only purpose to be served in defeating this amendment is the plan to refuse any recognition to Armenia. This will preserve intact the Russian nation and include Armenia in it, so that they will have to pay taxes to pay the Russian bonds held in London and Paris, and no matter how much of this money goes to Armenia eventually, the Russian bonds will still be intact and the point of order will be consistent.

ARMENIA FREED ITSELF.

On the 28th day of May, 1918, the Armenians promulgated their Declaration of Independence, and that day is their 4th of July. The country of which their Government had possession consisted of about 20,000 square miles at that moment and had some 2,000,000 inhabitants, most of whom were Armenians. They established the capital of their republicun Government with its cabinet and chamber of deputies at Erivan, a city of 90,000 people, within view of Mount Ararat and on the railroad line with Batum and Baku to Tabriz, Persia, and Erzerum, Turkey. They had in the field at that moment some 25,000 Armenian soldiers. When Armenian independence was declared, the Armenian general, Bagratouni, with some 12,000 soldiers, all Armenians, was in possession of the great oil city on the Caspian of Baku, which had some 300,000 inhabitants, and his control extended for some 50 miles in every direction over a country inhabited by Tartars, and he had absolute control from January to September of that year of the greatest oil fields in the world, Europe's oil supply. He and his soldiers were loyal citizens and soldiers of the Republic with its capital at Erivan.

ARMENIA INDEPENDENT MAY 28, 1918.

Early in June, 1918, the Turks proposed to the Republic of Armenia, with its capital at Erivan, to begin negotiations of peace, and the armistice was granted and negotiations were opened, a delegation representing Armenia going to Constantinople. Preliminary to the negotiations, the Turks acknowledged the independence of Armenia as of May 28, 1918.

During the participation of the Russians in the war some 160,000 Armenians fought in the Russian ranks. Kerensky's chief of staff was the Armenian soldier, Bagratouni, who furnished the brains for the temporary successes Kerensky achieved. When the Russian collapse came and their soldiers all left for home, Bagratouni, en route for Armenia, found himself at Baku without transportation, assembled 12,000 of his companions in the same condition, and seized the oil fields, the most brilliant stroke of arms achieved from the beginning to the end of the Great War, and held that for eight months, thus dominating the fuel supply for the German automobiles and for the airplanes. When that collapse came some 35,000 Armenians were in the Russian Army on the Turkish front. As the Russians left for their homes by way of Baku, these Armenians seized the Turkish front with such few Russians as stayed with them from Van on the Persian border through Erzinjan—160 miles southwest of the old Russian-Turkish border—on up to and including Trebizond, from which the Turks had been driven.

In November immediately the Armenian leaders organized from Erivan a national army, sending them to the Turkish front and preserving law and order throughout Russian Armenia. On the eastern front they found the Tartars at conflict with them along the Karabagh Mountains, making an extended effort to assist the Turks in front of Erzinjan and Trebizond. The Armenians, preparing for a governmental organization through December and January, were fighting the Turks to the west and the Tartars to the east of them, but were gradually pushed back by the Turks, who by the close of February had seized Ezeroum, Van, Trebizond in Turkish Armenia, and Kars in Russian Armenia.

THE BATTLE OF SARDARABAD.

On the 22d day of May, 1918, some 20,000 Armenians under Nazarbakof, Silikoff, and Piramoff, old soldiers trained in Russia, and Dro, an Armenian partisan chief from the mountains, made their last stand against some 30,000 Turks under Khalil Pasha at Sardarabad, at the foot of Mount Ararat, on the plains of Erivan, within 40 miles of that capital and within 20 miles of Echtmiadzin, for fifteen centuries the seat of their religion. Fighting with a valor born of despair for four days and losing 4,000 men, the Turks losing 9,000, they beat the Turkish Empire to a standstill and drove Khalil Pasha and his army from the field in full flight for the fortifications of Alexandropol, 60 miles from the field of battle, on which the Armenians that day won their independence from the Turks. At once they declared their independence, the Turks having asked for peace, and took their place among the nations of the world, the only nation in all this great struggle that won their independence by the sword on the field of battle, unaided and unassisted by any ally, a feat wholly unequaled by that of any other people of this century.

A few days before, Nazarbakoff, the commander in chief at Erivan, issued a pronunciamento making a last appeal to the Armenian people for their army. He told them that the soldiers were practically out of provisions and ammunition and urged all Armenians to hasten at once to Sardarabad with whatever supplies of provisions or ammunition they could bring to the army—and for miles around the women came during the fight with aprons filled with cartridges and bread to the fighting men of the oldest Christian nation in the world—and thus was won the most famous battle fought in Asia in this century, and you gentlemen and the reader never heard of it until now.

After the Russian collapse of November, the people of Transcaucasia, Armenians, Georgians, and Tartars, proceeded to organize at the great city of Tiflis in February, 1918, a provisional government which governed Armenia, Georgia, Azerbijan, and organized in February, 1918, as such provisional government. On the 22d day of April, 1918, this Transcaucasian Parliament declared their independence and conducted affairs for some five weeks, when, friction arising, they separated and each declared its own independence, the Armenians as aforesaid, May 28, 1918. The difficulty was that the Tartars, being Moslems, were determined to assist the Turks, and the Armenians declined to accede to any such arrangement and were determined to assist our allies in their fight against Germany, Austria, and Turkey.

So after the battle of Sardarabad, Armenia became an independent Republic by agreement with Turkey. Before their own organization definitely as a Republic, they had actually been in control of all the country from Erzinjan in Turkey, some 300 miles beyond the Karabagh Mountains, a territory containing about 100,000 square miles and some 3,000,000 of people.

TURKS TO BAKU.

Meanwhile the Germans had been desperately urging the Turks to get the oil fields, and just as soon as the Turkish armies made peace with the Armenian armies who beat them at Sardarabad, Noori Pasha marched first eight or ten thousand and later twice as many more, 80 miles from Alexandropole northeast to the railroad from Batum to Baku and attacked Bagratouni and his Armenians toward the last of June, 1918. From the 1st of July until the middle of September, Bagratouni held the oil fields in Baku against the best soldiers the Turks had. On the 1st of August they reached him with 1,200 British reinforcements who came from Teheran, Persia, sailing across the Caspian from Enzeli to Baku, and for just two weeks the English stayed with the Armenians.

The English then saw that they could not beat the Turks; that what the Armenians had done there was impossible and could not have happened and could not happen, and withdrew their troops to Persia, leaving Bagratouni alone with his Armenians, and for a month after that the Armenians held Baku and the oil fields and accomplished what the inefficient and incompetent Britishers said could not be done, and if the British officer had held his ground, as the Armenians held theirs for 30 days afterwards, the Turks never would have entered Baku and the oil fields, and the Bolsheviks never could have gotten down through Baku into Tiflis and Erivan and there would not at this minute be a Turkish soldier between Baku and Erzinjan. The desertion of Bagratouni at Baku August 15, 1918, by an alleged British soldier lost for the time the victory the Armenians had won at Sardarabad. Finally, 30 days later, after the departure of the British soldiers, Bagratouni, without supplies and without munitions of war, found himself forced to evacuate the oil fields and retire to Persia with 10,000 victorious Armenians, who asked nothing of their allies but cartridges and food, on which Christendom failed them. Sixty days later, when the armistice came in Europe, the Turks were in possession of Baku and the oil fields, which soon fell a prey to the Bolsheviks. At the close of October, in 1918, the Turks and the English at Constantinople, after Allenby's victory over the Turks in Palestine, made an armistice with the Turks under which the Turks withdrew all their soldiers from Baku, Kars, Alexandropol, and Russian Transcaucasia. During the interim between May 28 and after Sardarabad, until the victory in Palestine and the armistice between the English and their allies and the Turks, the Armenians had maintained their seat of government at Erivan. Thereupon they immediately took possession of Kars, Alexandropol, and all Russian Armenia, containing 30,000 square miles and 2,000,000 of people. On the 1st of November, 1918, Armenia was a republic of 30,000 square miles and 2,000,000 of people, with a capital at Erivan, a republic whose bitterest enemies at hand had conceded its independence from May 28 to November 1, a period of five full months, and were awaiting the decision of their allies to occupy Turkish Armenia, and for 25 months, until December, 1920, they were in full possession of their republic of 30,000 square miles, maintaining law and order and ministering justice and advancing education and caring for some hundreds of thousands of Christian refugees driven from Turkey.

During the same time Georgia was free, governing itself and the Tartars of Azerbijan, with their capital at Baku, after Bagratouni withdrew and the Turks finally left. In other words, in two and a half years that little mountain Republic maintained itself without any outside help except the flour sent by the American Government from the fund of $100,000,000, asked for by President Wilson for Europe, on which, by the motion of Mr. LITTLE, of Kansas, Armenia secured some ten millions of dollars.

ARMENIAN TAXES.

During these two and a half years the Armenian Republic continued the assessment of taxes similar to those levied by Russia, and, notwithstanding the condition of the country, the Armenians were so loyal that the Government collected some 80 per cent of the amount assessed, while the Governments of Azerbijan and Georgia were practically unable to collect any at all, securing only 5 or 6 per cent.

TREATY OF SEVRES.

In August, 1920, the representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy, Serbia, Greece, Turkey, Rumania, Japan, Poland, Belgium, Armenia, Czechoslovakia, all the allied powers except the United States of America, assembled at Sevres, France, to formulate the treaty of Sevres, asserting and maintaining and establishing the rights of these nations, of whom Armenia had accomplished more against the foe than any except Great Britain, France, and Serbia. The treaty was made and signed by these nations, including the representatives of the Turkish Government, then and there recognizing the independence of Armenia and its Government extending over the 30,000 square miles, as aforesaid, and adding thereto Turkish Armenia, the boundaries of which should be established by the President of the United States. On the 22d day of November, 1920, the President of the United States gave to Armenia under this treaty, with the agreement of Turkey, the four vilayets or Provinces of Ezeroum, Trebizond, Bitlis, and Van, Turkish Armenia, and giving them the Black Sea seaport of Trebizond. When this was done the Republic of Armenia consisted of a total of 80,000 square miles, containing 3,000,000 of people. This was the law of the world on the 22d day of November, 1920.

THE TURKS IN ARMENIA.

After the October armistice between the Turks and the Allies the Turks, as aforesaid, withdrew entirely from Russian Armenia, the last of their soldiers being out of there early in 1919, and no more Turks entered Russian Armenia until September, 1920. By that time the Bolsheviks were in full control of Russia and Baku. Interested parties among the Allies, who should have stood by Armenia, entered into an understanding with the Turks, and with their encouragement the Turks struck hands with the Bolsheviks. A Bolshevik army streamed down into the Caucasus from Baku to Erivan in December, 1920, and at the same moment the Turks found their way into Russian Armenia at Kars and Alexandropol. The Allies, for whom the Armenians had sacrificed and fought, making possible Allenby's victory and making impossible Ludendorff's drive to Paris, found themselves isolated and alone. For 30 days the Bolsheviks were at Erivan, and then in desperation the Armenian citizens chased them out of town, and in another 30 days the Bolsheviks in great force were back at Erivan; and finally, in April, 1921, finding they could not beat Turkey and Russia united, the Armenians withdrew to the shelter of the Karabagh Mountains, and their eagle perched on the heights of the Karabaghs in the inaccessible mountain Province of Zangazur, at the little city of Gerroosee, with 3,000 people. There they established their chamber of deputies, their cabinet, and their capital at Varatzian. There they still remain—Nishdek and 10,000 Armenian soldiers and that gallant little mountain Republic, which is still in existence, from May 28, 1918, down to this 5th day of August, 1921, three years and two months. Counting from the actual time of their control—it began in November, 1917—and it is then almost four years that the Armenians have maintained a government of their own.

Yet people talk of a mandate. Armenia desires no mandate; never has desired a mandate. All that Armenia asks of a Christian civilization is that they give her her share of the funds that these allies of Sevres have demanded the Germans shall supply to restore the world they tried to confiscate. If the allies of Sevres provide an equitable adjustment of the German funds, that money will supply the Armenians with everything needed to keep their people on foot, to plant their crops, to restore their ruined farms and villages, to place arms and ammunition in the hands of their soldiers for self-protection, and to build roads and railways to the sea that would put them in communication with the world. All that they ask of the greatest Christian Republic in the world is to use its great moral influence to induce the people of Europe, whom we have saved from ruin, to do justice and equity to the oldest of the Christian Republics, to the most gallant little nation on the face of the globe.

Near Bazue and other southern ports of Armenia is a tribe Ezidi. They are not Christians, neither are they Moslems. They have their own religion, which comes from antiquity. As they were persecuted by the Moslem Turks, they have been always friendly with the Armenians. Some 35,000 of them are living in Russian Armenia now, and from the beginning of the war they were all the time cooperating with the Armenians against the Turks. In the Battle of Sardarabad they had 500 horsemen assisting the Armenians, and when in the heat of battle the Armenian commander—Piramoff—ordered the Ezidi to make a demonstration on the rear of the Turkish infantry on the Turkish right, their chief—Temoor Beg—at the head of his horsemen, dashed through the Turkish lines directly, making a panic among the Turkish ranks, and achieved the fate of the battle.

A RÉSUMÉ.

At the time of the armistice in November, 1918, the Armenian Republic had an area of 30,000 square miles for the population of 2,000,000 people, an army of some 30,000, a republic government, capital at Erivan, a city of 90,000, and they had been officially free from May 28, 1918, and practically free from November, 1917. And from January to September, 1918, they had been in full possession of the great oil city of Baku on the Caspian. In November, 1918, the Turks and the Russians withdrew from any claim on Russian Armenia.

SEVRES TREATY.

In August, 1920, the Government of our allies and of Turkey agreed to the Sevres treaty, acknowledging the independence of Armenia, of 30,000 square miles in Russia, and of Turkish Armenia, and leaving to the President of the United States Turkish Armenia.

ON NOVEMBER 22, 1920, HE GAVE TO THE ARMENIAN REPUBLIC THE FOUR PROVINCES OF EZEROUM, TREBIZOND, BITLIS, AND VAN, MAKING A TOTAL OF 80,000 SQUARE MILES FOR 3,000,000 PEOPLE. IF THE ALLIED NATIONS, FOR WHOM ARMENIA FOUGHT, HAD ADHERED TO THE TERMS OF THAT TREATY AND TREATED ARMENIA ONE-TENTH AS FAITHFULLY AS ARMENIA TREATED THEM, THESE 80,000 SQUARE MILES WHICH ARMENIA WON ON THE BATTLE FIELD WOULD BE THE ARMENIAN REPUBLIC TO-DAY.

In December, 1920, the Bolshevik army began to stream into Caucasus, and the Turks contemporaneously seized Kars and Alexandropol and the Armenians were overwhelmed. The Soviet Republic was established in Armenia, and is still in possession June 27, 1922. Russia and Turkey both recognize it as independent.

There were no Turkish soldiers in Russian Armenia for 18 months from early in 1919 to September, 1920, and no Russian soldiers entered there from November, 1917, to December, 1920. Then the Turks seized Kars and Alexandropol, and finally, in April, 1921, the Armenians were overwhelmed. October 1, 1918, Damascus fell to Allenby.

AMERICA'S DUTY IN 1921.

The time has come when the American Republic should take its place at the council table of the nations and seek enforcement of the decrees its soldiers registered on the battle fields of France. The judicious and timely insistence by our State Department upon the release of American prisoners in Moscow and that concession by the Russians has opened the door to vast possibilities. America should now definitely inform Russia that before our Republic opens up negotiations of friendly relations, Russia should show her respect for the rights of other nations by withdrawing her invading troops from Armenia, Georgia, Azerbijan, and Dagastan. Then, those peoples will reestablish their local governments and law and order will be maintained there, and the United States should promptly recognize its sister and allied Republic of Armenia, send a minister to Erivan, and receive one here.

After 500 years of conquest by the sword, the outlawed Turk fights with his back to the wall against the Greek who he has plundered for half a thousand years. No statesman, no Christian, can give any consideration whatever to the demands of the Turk. The Greeks are now in possession of a third of Anatolia. Our Government would do well to convey to Great Britain, France, and Italy the present opinion, the fixed opinion of the American people that any aid rendered by France or Italy to the Turk at this juncture would be considered by Christendom as an unfriendly act, and civilization should give its moral support and such financial aid as is necessary to the Greek from this day. Angora and Constantinople should be informed that every Turkish soldier must be withdrawn from the Armenian vilayets, that those provinces may be left free to join with Russian Armenia in that Republic. The victories of the Greeks have now almost stripped that region of Turkish soldiers withdrawn to assist Kemal Pasha fight for Anatolia. The views of the United States that this should be done and that the treaty of Sevres should be carried out can very reasonably be presented to our allies in Europe, and the combined word of America, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Serbia can express to the Turk the final opinion of mankind that if there shall remain in Anatolia any country of the Turks to rape, rapine, loot, and murder, which is the only Turkish method of government, it must be confined to Turkish Anatolia, and Armenia left free.

Many waters have gone over the dam since the gentleman from Kansas spoke in 1921 on this subject. Many thousands have died of hunger and cold, vast hosts of men and women have died by the hands of the Turks, from Erzerum to Harpoot. The scanty remnants of that ancient, brilliant, and gallant race have been scattered from Asia Minor to the four quarters of the globe since the Foreign Affairs Committee maintained the lofty dignity of their point of order that it was not germane to that bill to aid the Russians from starving in the Volga.

But time has already vindicated the charge that the point of order was invalid and should have been overruled, for the Government of the United States has already given it the lie and sent 6,000,000 tons of foodstuffs into Russian Armenia with the money Congress authorized to be expended, as the committee insisted, in the valley of the Volga.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By reason of the right given me to revise and extend my remarks in the debate on the bill in progress when the remarks at the beginning hereof were made in 1921 in Congress, I present herewith certain quotations from leading magazines and papers appearing since then and calling attention to the dire and awful condition of the Armenian people. At that time it was impossible to convince the House, and particularly the Foreign Affairs Committee, which had charge of that legislation, that there was any necessity for such aid to be extended to Armenia, and they proceeded with calm disdain for any

Armenian difficulties to put through their bill as they made it, which is apparently the loftiest mark of statesmanship in Congress a good deal of the time.

THE STARVING ARMENIANS.

(By Paxton Hibben, F. R. G. S.)

Before I left Constantinople to come into Anatolia and Transcaucasia Admiral Bristol, the United States high commissioner to Turkey, sent for me. He said:

"I want you to be fair to the Turk. Just tell all the truth, without prejudice one way or the other, and it will be all right." So I said I would. And what I have written is just a plain, simple statement of all the truth. I have nothing whatever against the Turk myself. These are the facts. Draw your own conclusions.

When I stepped off the train at Alexandropol, Armenia, once a vast Russian garrison town housing 90,000 soldiers and the most important railway junction of Transcaucasia, through which Persia, Turkey, and Russia are all three connected by rail, I had to push my way through a crowd of refugees lining the platform of the station. There were among them hundreds of children quite naked, who clawed at my clothes and begged for bread, not in the sing-song of the professional child beggar of the streets of eastern cities but with a desperate insistence, a sort of sobbing, half-mad chatter, with the words "hunger" and "bread" tumbling over one another, with no sense in it all. The grown-up people were silent, staring ahead of them with vacant eyes. What they wore was not clothing, but rags pieced together with bits of old sacking, disintegrating remnants of sheepskin, and odds and ends like the filthy trove of garbage cans and back lots. And with—they were half naked, barefoot—and with their unkempt hair and incredible emaciation they seemed specters from some drawing by Gustave Doré.

As I made my way through the crowd of these unmoving hopeless people, tugged at by children's hands, I could not take my eyes off of one figure standing in the station doorway, holding the jamb with clawing hands and swaying perilously. His face had that unreal waxen consistency of the face of a dead man in a coffin. I had watched him creep up to a standing posture by holding to the door, and now as he seemed about to try to walk I wanted to shout to him that he could not make it.

He only took two steps and fell headlong, slithering down to the platform through the close-packed crowd. When they picked him up he was dead. I asked a soldier of the Red Guard what had been the matter with the man. He shrugged his shoulders. "Starvation," he said.

As I walked through the dim hallway of the station I could scarcely make my way for the women and children huddled in heaps on the floor, lying all piled together, listless and uncaring whether they were stepped on or not. One woman sat, stolid, her back against the wall, a shapeless form piece of old sheet over her head and shoulders, the only covering above her waist. In the crook of her arm she held a baby so small and with such thin legs and arms that it looked like a doll, trying to nurse it at a breast that held nothing. The baby turned its head from side to side, crying in a thin little voice like a whisper of misery.

Outside, in the scorching sun and the relatively clear air I drew a long breath, fighting down the nausea that had seized me. Across from the station I could see more groups of refugees camped on the ground, some of them with a few possessions still—a cup, a pot made of an old gasoline tin, a bundle of rags under which to sleep at night. Nothing else.

To get away from them I jumped off the side of the platform onto what I took to be a piece of discarded sacking, next a torn and dirt-stained comforter, evidently covering something. As my boot struck the piece of sacking a little cry came from it. I tried to get my foot out of the way, and my spur caught in the sacking and carried it away. Something living under the comforter lifted a corner and looked out at me, and I turned to see what I had narrowly missed stepping on. It was a naked child, just born, its eyes not yet open and out from the shadow of the comforter there peered the mother, her eyes big with suffering, and her skin hot with fever.

I got away somehow, stumbling toward a cab at the corner of the station. And then, just as I had almost got to the cab and away from all this horrible nightmare I came upon the worst of it. Right at the corner of the station, in the hot sun, almost naked and pitifully emaciated lay a boy, quite dead, his staring eyes still open. And people came and went about their business—women carrying water from the station hydrant, cabs driving up and off again, little skeleton children playing about, all close to where he lay. And no one paid the slightest attention to the pitiful body, lying there in the sun. In time the dead wagon would pass the station in its daily rounds, and he would be piled on it with the others and taken away. There was nothing else to be done about it.

I scrambled into a cab and told the izvoschik to drive me away from the station, from all that swarm of unbelievable misery. But at every turn in the streets we came upon more things just like what I had seen—more refugees huddled in corners, more little naked children, more shrunken-faced, walking dead men recovering from the cholera only to die after all of just plain hunger.

"My God!" I said to the first American relief worker I met. "What's happened? Where have all of these wretched people come from? The last time I was out here, two years ago, things were pretty bad, but they weren't like this. What's it all about?"

But he only shook his head. "I don't know. I only got here in May, and it was like this when I came—only worse." And he sent me to the president of the Alexandropol Revcom. There I found out.

"You see, the Turks only left here on April 21," a soviet official informed me. "They were here from November last year—five months. In the Schoragul plain around Alexandropol they burned 140 villages, and these refugees are the people of those villages. They have nothing. They were driven out without warning and their houses fired. They have flocked into Alexandropol because they have nowhere else to go. But here there are still thousands of the Armenian refugees who were driven out of Turkey in 1917, and we have no place to put these newcomers and no food to give them. They are dying at the rate of about 25 a day now, in the summer, when it is warm. God knows what will happen when winter sets in. We have 141 cases of cholera here, and we can not even handle that. We have nothing either. What can we do? The Turks stripped the country clean." And so that's that.

Because in this part of the world newspapers are few and events are recounted from mouth to mouth, with the usual accretions that follow naturally upon such a method of recording history, I went out to see these 140 villages around Alexandropol from which the Turks were said to have driven thousands of wretched relics of humanity that had flocked into the railway center in the hope of finding food or of getting away to somewhere where food could be had. All around the Schoragul plain I went from village to village, and always it was the same story; the pathetic, half underground dwellings of these people, where man and beast alike lived in meticulous cleanliness and the frank simplicity of very old races were destroyed. The roof beams, hewn logs for the most part, almost impossible to replace in a country where no tree is seen in days of travel, had been burned. Where communes possessed, as frequently they did, a modern American or Swedish plow, harrow, or reaper for the common use the machine was left but the axle was carried away or some essential pin or bolt smashed into uselessness. And not a beast of burden, an ox to pull a plow or an ass to carry grain or a cow to give milk for the babies who seem to be born every few minutes in this prolific land. The country is stripped clean.

And as I made my way around among the villages toward the north of Alexandropol I came at last to a little cluster of them at the foot and on the slopes of Shti Tapa, some 25 versts northeast of Alexandropol on the Karakilisa main road. About 2 miles from Akh-Boolag I stopped a peasant on the road and asked if the Turks had been in that part of the valley, too.

"Come with me," he said. And he led me to a bridge over what would be a mountain torrent in the winter, running out of a gorge called Madjiloom Dijoor. "Siptak zoor" (White Spring Creek), he said, pointing to the creek, and his finger picked out here and there on the dry, white stones of the bed of the stream strange looking objects. They seemed to be garments, women's garments, skirts, shawls, here and there a shoe or a belt, all clinging to the rocks as if the water had left them there when the creek dried up under the summer sun. I climbed down into the bed of the creek but the peasant dragged me on up the ravine.

About 200 yards farther I suddenly came upon a human skull. Then another. Then a skeleton, all lying stretched out, complete. Half way up the gravel bank a shin bone stuck out with a shoe and stocking still on the end of it. The bed of the stream was dotted with bones.

Basil Soorp Nesbandian, my guide said his name was, of Akh-Boolag, took me up on the bank, which for about 100 yards was broad and flat, some 30 feet above the bottom of the stream. Here there were scores of graves, weighted down with stones to keep out marauding animals.

And from that height one could look up and down the stream where skulls were sown like the stones in the bed of the stream and skeletons lay higgledy-piggledy among the fading remnants of what was once clothing. On this height above the stream I stooped down and picked up an empty rifle cartridge. It bore the Turkish date of 1322 and the inscription Mauser and the star and crescent. There were such shells all about this high ground.

I asked Basil to tell me about it. Here it is, or as much of it as I can tell for publication, for some of the details are not printable:

It was late in October when the Turks came to this district, Basil said, or early in November. At first they only took everything away—cattle, grain, kitchen utensils, farming implements, everything. Then they began looting the houses for personal effects. Finally, one day they gathered all the men of Akh-Boolag into the two largest houses of the village and set them afire, with straw piled all over them to see that they burned. The women, Basil said, they took all in one great batch to the place where we were standing in Madjloom Dijoor and, binding them up along the edge of the gravel bank, first picked out 500 of the prettier ones, whom they sent back to the Turkish Army, and then shot or bayoneted the rest.

"How many of them were there in all?" I asked. "It is hard to say," he replied. "They came from a number of villages hereabouts—my own village, Akh-Boolag, Landar, Kaitakhebi, Gek-ekhoosh, Hezerkeuy. I should say that we found about 3,500 bodies when the spring freshets washed the snow away."

I went on to the villages. The houses were looted and burned. In Akh-Boolag, in the ruined house of Vartan Karakoosian, I found among the ashes the charred bones of some of the men who had been locked in there and burned with the house. "We got most of them out," Vartan said, apologetically, "and buried them there in that mound." And he pointed to a great heap far from any house. Four hundred men were burned in Vartan's house and about 50 in another house—old men and boys. The men of possible military age were all taken off to be made soldiers in Mustapha Kemal's army. I talked to a few villagers who were left—the men who had been away when the thing had taken place, or who had hidden or fled and so escaped. They all told me the same story, both as to the women and the men.

A little way from the Djadool Station, on the Alexandropol-Tiflis Railway, in another similar ravine, Moerati Djoor, near the village of Akh-Klissa, there was another such collection of skeletons and graves—only this time of men. Here Aram Baloyantz told the story—how between 1,000 and 1,500 men from the villages of Akh-Klissa, Arakhvail, Darbant, and Karanbon were taken out by the Turks of an artillery regiment stationed near the railway, bound together in batches, and bayoneted. Many of the corpses had 30 bayonet wounds when they were found in the spring. Aram said. And Arshaloois Arpikian, the station master at Djadjool, and Saribek Rafaeloff, the track-repair man, confirmed the story.

As I walked back to the road through the high grass I stumbled on something. It was the torso and one thigh of one of those who had been buried too shallowly. And that's all.

Back in Alexandropol again, one day I came upon the dead wagon making its sinister rounds, and followed it to the plat beyond the railway tracks, where every grave is a trench that holds the day's toll of those who have died of hunger, of cholera, of exposure, of despair. The morning's load that day was only nine.

"Not much business to-day," grinned the driver. "Weather's too fine. Wait till it turns cold." A genial soul, going about his ghastly task with a certain cheer, as why not? He piled them in the trench, one atop the other, old women, bearded old men, little girls, babies, all who were too weak, too undernourished to survive.

"They make a fine harvest for us gravediggers, the Turks," he went on. "Wherever they go they leave death behind them." They make a fine harvest for the gravediggers, the Turks. And that's all.

(After gathering the startling data incorporated in the above article Mr. Hibben, acting as secretary for the Russian commission of the Near East Relief, covered more than 5,000 miles in European Russia. In the region which he traversed, along the Volga River, it is estimated that 3,000,000 men, women, and children are doomed to die of starvation during the next six months. What he learned while going from Kazan to Astrakhan will form the basis of another article, which will appear in Leslie's in the near future.)

[Review of Reviews, January, 1922.]

From Batum the insistent appeal has come from relief workers for food, food, and more food. Capt. A. E. Yarrow, relief director for the district, declares that more than 100,000 children in the Caucasus district alone will starve unless the Near East Relief is able to extend its aid to them, in addition to maintaining its present work. Besides the children there are thousands of adult refugees from whom aid must be withheld until all of the youngsters are cared for. The Dachel was one of the first food ships sent out from the United States in the face of the present crisis.)

ARMENIA TO-DAY.

(By John H. Finley.)

Doctor Finley was at the head of the Red Cross committee in Palestine during the last months of the war. After the armistice he was the first American to make his way from the Euphrates to Constantinople, the object of his going being to bring the Red Cross forces into contact with those of the Near East Relief approaching from Constantinople. Under the arrangement made at this time the Near East took over all the work in that region, and has since then carried it on with tireless energy and heroism. Doctor Finley is now vice chairman of the Near East Relief organization.—The Editor.)

Conditions in Armenia to-day are worse than they have been at any time since the armistice. Such is the statement made by a commission of the Near East Relief, recently returned from a survey of conditions throughout the field of operations of that organization. Four hundred thousand people are homeless and destitute; 100,000 orphaned children are without shelter or food.

To the American people, long since wearied with the story of the suffering of this tragic nation, the statement must be dismal and disheartening. Millions of dollars have been given and dispensed for the saving of Armenia, and the Armenians are to-day worse off than ever before. Yet a brief consideration of events in this part of the world explains very clearly not only the situation that now exists but our responsibility for it.

While the rest of the world has been fighting its way out of the chaos of war, reestablishing its economic and industrial life and rebuilding its resources, Armenia has remained a battle field. Warring armies have continued to lay waste her fields and destroy her homes and render her people destitute. When at last peace came, with the establishment of the present Government of Armenia last spring, it was too late. The resources of the Armenians were exhausted. Their fields were barren. Famine was upon them.

The American commission found, in the principal cities of Armenia, a state of appalling want, with the dead lying about the streets—the same conditions that existed in 1919, when the United States Government sent a large quantity of flour to Armenia to succor that unhappy people. But now no Government aid is available, and the situation, as shocking to-day as it was two years ago, is being met entirely by private philanthropy through the Near East Relief.

The description of conditions in Armenia as observed by this commission of Americans is almost incredible in its bald statement of horrors—the dead gathered up daily and carted about like so much refuse to the outskirts of the city and there interred without ceremony in a common ditch; the market places, the railway stations, crowded with homeless, hungry people clad in miserable rags, begging for food or listlessly waiting death, too weak to move; every train carrying hundreds of the stronger on the roofs of the cars, on the bumpers, anywhere that foothold could be secured, all in search for food that did not exist.

As the American party descended from its train at Alexandropol, the old Russian garrison town and railway center of Transcaucasia, they stumbled across the dead body of a little boy, lying on the tracks. A grown man, livid with cholera, starting toward their car to ask for a bit of bread fell dead at their feet. At every turn new instances of the same harrowing kind gave evidence of the desperate nature of conditions which this commission of Americans found.

"The cause of the present acute famine situation in Armenia," as stated by the commission of five Americans who visited the famine area in Armenia, "was the destruction of some 140 villages by the invading Turks, from which the populations were driven, and whence all beasts of burden, agricultural and household implements, and furniture were removed by the invaders. The evacuation of this portion of Armenia did not take place until April 21, 1921, too late for any extensive crop to be put in, even had the peasants the draft animals and the implements to plow and sow the ground, which they did not have. Of the original 585,000 Armenian refugees from Turkish Armenia, there remained some 280,000 still unassimilated among the villages of the Armenian Republic, a charge upon the meager resources of the country. To this number the Turkish invasion added some 120,000, making a rough total of about 400,000 homeless refugees now facing winter without food in Armenia.

Of the 50,000 Armenians concentrated in cities and towns, by far the greater part were actually in starving condition when observed by this commission early in August. Children were lying dead in the streets, and the sick and infirm were dying in great numbers daily. Cholera had set in and was making havoc.

The only hope amidst all this misery and despair is the Near East Relief. Within their orphanage, mostly old army barracks turned over to them by the Armenian Government, more than 60,000 children are sheltered and clothed and fed. In the Alexandropol orphanages alone 18,000 boys and girls, the largest collection of orphans in history, are being cared for, at an average cost of less than $10 per month per child.

In all these orphanages an attempt has been made to make the children self-supporting. Recognizing the fact that Armenia's future depends on these boys and girls, Near East Relief is endeavoring to train each one in some trade, so that at the earliest possible moment they will be able to undertake not only their own support but the economic regeneration of the country. Classes in shoemaking, carpentry, printing, tailoring for the boys and weaving and sewing for the girls are turning out every month experts in each of these various lines. A few promising children are given especial schooling, with a view to becoming teachers.

This work in the orphanages has served not only to train the children and teach them self-reliance and independence but it has enabled the organization to run its establishments on a most economical basis.

Outside the orphanages 50,000 more children are fed one meal a day and provided with clothing sent over from America. The meal consists of a bowl of soup and a piece of bread, but it is enough to keep the children from starvation. There are 63 hospitals in various centers throughout the Caucasus and Asia Minor and 129 clinics, to which people come on foot from miles around, often three or four days' journey.

But even with all this, the facilities are woefully inadequate. For every child inside an orphanage there is at least one outside, without shelter or food or friends. There are thousands of adult refugees whom it is impossible for the Near East Relief, with its limited funds, to help at all, for the saving of the children must come first. In nearly all of the centers the industrial work, which promised so much, has had to be discontinued for lack of room, lack of material, and lack of skilled workers to carry it on. Education is being given up reluctantly but of necessity in many of the larger orphanages. And, worst of all, dozens and even hundreds of children are being turned away every day to wander the streets, hungry and half naked. "All this," says Mr. Vickery, general secretary of the organization, "was in August, when the danger from cold and exposure was at a minimum. Even then the toll of deaths was 20 or more in one city alone each day. What it must be now that the snow is on the ground can only be imagined."

Another element in this distressing situation throughout the Near East was brought to the fore by Capt. Paxton Hibben, recently returned from an investigation of conditions both in Russia and Transcaucasia.

"We are bending every energy to remodel the world on a little higher level than before the war," he said. "But we are permitting millions of children throughout the famine regions of the Near East to grow up with the terrible complexes of moral disintegration that are created by hunger and the sight of hunger all about them. There must somehow be found for them the element of kindliness and brotherhood to be brought into their lives at an age when impressions mold the future of the man or woman."

The problem of the Pacific is ended. The constructive thought of America is free to turn elsewhere in the task of regenerating the world after the war. There is no spot in the world which needs this regenerating influence more than the Near East and no agency of mercy and rehabilitation better prepared to conduct such a work than the Near East Relief. It is a worthy cause and should have the support of America.

BLEEDING TO DEATH.

[From Leslie's Weekly, May 18, 1918.]

The cradle of Christianity is Armenia. Her story is the most tragic in human history. For 16 centuries, in the face of the cruelest persecutions, her people have been faithful unto death. Not Serbia, nor Poland, nor Belgium, but Armenia furnishes the war's most horrible chapter. The Moslem world in general refused to answer the call for a holy war, but the attempt to exterminate the Armenians has been to the Turks a holy crusade.

The great offense of the Armenians is that they are Christians, and the German Kaiser uttered not one word of protest when his Moslem ally sought to destroy this Christian race. Fresh opportunity for Armenian slaughter in the Caucasus region has come to the Turks through the Russian peace. Germany insisted that all Russian troops be withdrawn from this region. The Russian Government, which yielded to Germany's demand, and the Armenian national council are now protesting against the wholesale slaughter of Armenians in the Caucasus by Turkish troops.

Armenia furnished 160,000 soldiers to Russia in this war, and is still ready to offer an army of 150,000 to fight the Turks. We agree with Representative LITTLE, of Kansas, that the United States could not spend $10,000,000 more wisely than in helping Armenia to get back into the war. Armenia looks to America not only to save her people from German and Turkish slavery but also to save them from starving.

Five dollars will feed a representative of this ancient and noble Christian race for one month. Send your offering to the Armenian and Syrian relief, 1 Madison Avenue, New York City. Every cent goes directly to saving starving Armenians. And don't fail to write to the Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE, M. C., Washington, D. C., for a free copy of his recent remarkable and enlightening speech on the atrocities that Armenia has suffered at the hands of the unspeakable Turk.

It is an amazing revelation well worth reading. It is one of the saddest chapters of this cruel war, sad enough to make the world weep.

POINT OF ORDER OVERRULED.

When the Russian relief bill was under discussion in the House, the gentleman from Kansas offered an amendment specifically directing that a certain portion of the fund appropriated should go to Armenia. The gentleman in charge of the bill made a point of order against the amendment, and his point of order was sustained. In the spring of this year, 1922, the Government department in charge of this fund decided to spend a portion of that money in sending 6,000 tons of foodstuffs to Armenia, and the point of order was finally overruled.

As you know, Armenia, Georgia, and Azerbaijan, lying side by side, occupy the land between the Black and the Caspian Seas. They have, with the approval of the Russian Government, a sort of a working agreement that keeps them out of trouble with each other. Last fall they arranged a possible agreement with the Turkish Government, conceding their existence, whenever the Russian Soviet should see fit to agree thereto. If Christendom and Turkey had carried out the treaty they made at Sevres, the Armenian Republic would extend from its capital at Erivan, in the mountains, to the seaport of Trebizond, on the Black Sea, and to the borders of Syria far to the South. If that had been done, hundreds of thousands of poor dead people would now be alive and prosperous and happy in a Christian State. The committee should have other sources of information than this department alone.

A few sessions ago, when the Foreign Affairs Committee brought their diplomatic bill before the House, the gentleman from Kansas moved to amend by making the minister to Persia minister to Armenia and Persia, with residence at Erivan, the Armenian capital, on the railroad, near the sea, and better situated for a Persian minister than was even the Persian capital. That would have been an official recognition by this Republic of the Armenian Republic, and Turkey and Russia would not have ventured to raise a hand against the Armenians, and the Armenians would still hold Kars and Alexandropol, which Loris Melikoff, the Armenian general, took from the Turks three generations ago. A point of order stopped that amendment, and the fingers of that point of order, gentlemen, drip with the blood of 500,000 Christians, dead by the hands of the Turk since then. I would not wish to be the man who will be called to answer at the bar of God for the points of order that have so helped to ruin the oldest of Christian peoples. The great Creator of the universe gave to the Armenians the soul of a mighty people, and through the storm and strife and stress of sixteen centuries that proud spirit has never broken. Christendom has deserted them, and if the God of their fathers and our fathers is to give to them as their own the land they have held so long, the rescue must come soon, and surely it will.

Right forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne,
But that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,

OF

HON. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,

OF VIRGINIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Sunday, May 28, 1922.

The House had under consideration House Resolution 350, relating to the life, character, and public services of Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks, I wish to pay a brief tribute to the public service of Mr. FLOOD. It was my misfortune that I could not be present when the exercises were held. Sickness detained me. Except for that cause I would have participated in those exercises. I can add now little, if anything, to the splendid tributes already paid to Mr. FLOOD's worth. The story of his life and work has been written in the language of love. His zeal and fidelity are well attested by the causes he championed and by the results he attained.

When the sad message came to us that Mr. FLOOD was dead, his colleagues felt a keen sense of personal loss. The people of his district, who had long honored him, and whom he in turn had honored, grieved that he had gone. Virginia mourned the early departure of a distinguished and faithful son. I joined in that sorrow.

I had not known Mr. FLOOD long. Our acquaintance began with my entry into service here in July, 1918. He was among the first of my colleagues whom I met, and I found him ever ready to assist me and willing to advise me. He was ever courteous and considerate, manifesting at all times a desire to make my service a success. Out of the abundance of his legislative experience he was able to advise wisely, and his advice was given cheerfully. He was of material assistance to me, and not to me alone but to all new Members.

Mr. FLOOD's service at the head of the great Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he was a member during the war, must be remembered always. His coworkers have attested his service to his native State and to the Nation. He was faithful to State and Nation alike, and he was untiring always in his efforts for their welfare. Intense, energetic, courageous, and devoted to country, he achieved much for his country's welfare. He was loyal to friend and fearless to foe. He was an indefatigable worker, and whenever call to service came he was ready. To the great party of which he was a most important part he gave generously, yielding at last his life in a struggle that culminated in the greatest victory his party had won in Virginia for many years.

From young manhood to the day of his death Mr. FLOOD was fighting in the cause of the Democratic Party. He was a leader among men. Representing that great party, he served with signal ability in the general assembly of the State, in the constitutional convention of his State, and in the Congress of the Nation.

Mr. FLOOD was aggressive. When he supported a cause he rendered no half-hearted service. He gave the best that was in him. He fought valiantly, and usually where the battle was the hottest he might be found. He never failed in an unfaltering love for his native State.

But I dare not attempt in the brief limits of a memorial address to recount his services. Though I knew him but a few years, our brief acquaintance ripened into friendship. When I last saw him he was bearing the banner of his party to splendid victory. I little realized that he was to pass so soon. Yet at that time his strength was failing. He spared not himself in that struggle. From every section came the call for his personal work, and so far as humanly possible every call was answered. He stopped not to count the cost, so far as he personally was concerned. Had he done so he might yet be with us.

I knew Mr. FLOOD in his home, where the gentler, finer qualities of the man were clearly shown. There, with his family around him, he was at his best.

The vacant places in our ranks are soon filled. The scenes shift constantly. The faces of to-day are absent to-morrow. New faces come. Thus it has always been and will always be; but while his comrades remain Mr. FLOOD will live in loving memory. When these comrades shall have gone, he will live in the splendid record that he made in the legislative halls of the Nation.

To us Mr. FLOOD is asleep, and we may not wake him; but after all may he not now know in fuller measure that—

Death is the veil which
Those who live call life;
They sleep, and it is lifted.

ADDRESS

OF

HON. R. WALTON MOORE,

OF VIRGINIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Sunday, May 28, 1922.

The House had under consideration House Resolution 350, relating to the life, character, and public services of Hon. H. D. FLOOD, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I unite with the others who have so eloquently discussed the events of his public career and the relations that marked his private life, in deploring the untimely death of our late colleague. I will long think of him as closely identified with three most important periods in the history of his State and the country.

He served in the Legislature of Virginia at a time when the devastation created by the Civil War was being repaired; when the resources of the State were extremely limited; and when a serious controversy as to the amount and settlement of its indebtedness placed it in a most uncertain and precarious position. The fate of Virginia then depended upon the wisdom and vigor of the legislature and the view to be taken by the Supreme Court of its enactments. At that juncture Mr. FLOOD, though a youthful member of the house of delegates, displayed his characteristic resolution and energy, and contributed his full part in solving the great problem that was being dealt with.

Later, Mr. FLOOD served in the State constitutional convention of 1901-02. The State was then called upon to solve another great problem which necessitated the recasting of its fundamental law. The situation was difficult; the work most delicate and laborious; and the demand upon the time, the strength, and the patience of the members of the convention almost beyond precedent. In that body, whose labors, after long months of toil, were brought to a successful conclusion, Mr. FLOOD was one of the outstanding figures. He served on the most important committee, which was charged with the duty of considering and reporting a suffrage plan, and he ably and zealously participated in the debates upon all of the vital issues which had to be disposed of. While the record of his service in the legislature can only be known by reference to the official journals and to the newspapers of the time, the details of his record in the convention are fortunately preserved in the stenographic report of its proceedings, to which those who come after us will turn for information as to the great danger that was then threatening and the course pursued by him and his colleagues in their effort to avert it and make the future safe.

Then, in the maturity of his experience as a Member of the House of Representatives, it fell to him to bring before the House the resolution under which this country entered the World War. There will never be forgotten the marvelously dramatic incidents of the spring of 1917—the scene at the Capitol when the President delivered his wonderful address to Congress, declaring that the time had arrived for definite and final action, and the scene a little later when the resolution of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was brought forward for consideration by its chairman, Mr. FLOOD.

Thomas Jefferson's public career was of a most varied character. But in writing his own epitaph he expressed the desire that he should be remembered as "author of the Declaration of Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia." There are many of us who, disregarding incidents that are comparatively minor, will wish to have our lamented colleague remembered as a public man because of the service he rendered his State and his country in connection with the three great transactions I have briefly outlined, in which he so conspicuously participated.

The Agricultural Interests of the Country Should Have a Representative on the Federal Reserve Board.

OF

HON. WILLIAM E. ANDREWS,

OF NEBRASKA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 23, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (S. 2263) to amend the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to amend the Federal reserve act in such a manner as to give distinct recognition and representation to the agricultural interests of the country in the membership of the Federal Reserve Board. This is a very wise and a very important amendment.

Agriculture is the fundamental enterprise of the Nation. Measures which will contribute to its increased prosperity will enhance and promote the welfare of every other financial industry and economic enterprise of the Nation. Those who think that agriculture must be hampered in order that other enterprises may prosper make a very great mistake with respect to the welfare of the entire country.

The Federal reserve system was originally designed to assist all legitimate enterprises of the American people, particularly in times of stress and emergency. The general outlines of this system were established by the work of the Monetary Commission in an effort to stabilize the banking system of the country and furnish an elastic currency that would meet, handle, and reach all sections of the country by furnishing adequate funds to protect and promote all lines of American industry.

In 1920 and 1921, however, the Federal Reserve Board failed to respond to the needs of the agricultural interests of the country to protect them against serious loss. The board entered upon a period of deflation at the critical moment, advanced rates, compelled member banks, especially in the Kansas City district, to liquidate their loans. That action compelled the member banks, especially in that section of the country, as it did in many others, to call upon farmers for the liquidation of their loans at a time when they needed credit. This policy of deflation inaugurated and put into effect by the Federal Reserve Board carried ruin to farmers and stockmen in different parts of the country.

If the Federal Reserve Board had responded faithfully to the original purpose of its creation it would have granted to those member banks an extension of time on their paper which, in turn, would have enabled those banks to have extended the credit to the farmers and stockmen who were otherwise thrown into serious distress.

When the governor of the board, Mr. W. P. G. Harding, was asked to consider the provision of the law which says that the Federal reserve system was not created to make profits, he promptly replied that the Federal reserve system could not avoid making profits for that period of time. Of course, greater profits would follow to the system with an advance in rates and the placing of larger loans at the same time in the financial centers of the country. It is interesting to note that at that very time speculators were manipulating the sugar market. They succeeded to such an extent that the price of sugar to the consumers was advanced to 25 and 30 cents a pound.

If the Federal Reserve Board had granted like favors to the agricultural sections of the country, many farmers and stockmen would have been saved from financial bankruptcy.

In order to make it doubly certain that no such evil purpose shall be perpetrated upon the agricultural interests hereafter a loyal and able representative of those interests should have a place on the Federal Reserve Board. Under such circumstances the signal can be given, the facts can be disclosed, and the agricultural interests of the country will not be likely to sustain the injuries that they did formerly when they had no representative on that board.

It is urged by some that this bill is class legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has dwelt at great length upon the alleged follies of class legislation. In his dreams he seems to see an organization which he describes as the agricultural bloc. In his nightly visions he imagines that the farm bloc is to bring great misfortune to the country. In his wakeful and lucid moments he will surely come to understand that the so-called farm bloc will not be so dictatorial in the affairs of the Nation as the so-called eastern or New England bloc that dominated legislative affairs for a long period of time. Men in this and the former Congress who recognize the importance of giving to the agricultural interests of the country proper recognition in keeping with the welfare of the entire Nation must be considered and adjusted equitably with one another so as to give the greatest activity and prosperity to each and all. They are simply demanding that the agricultural interests shall not be placed below their rightful place in this national program.

We do not come with ill will and sinister purposes toward any important legitimate interests of the country. But we do insist that no one shall lay violent hands upon the fundamental industry of the American people—agriculture.

Of course it is not to be expected that the appointment of a representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve Board will solve all the ills from which the Nation may at any time suffer. It will, however, assure the agricultural interests of the Nation a loyal, proper, and effective representation in the adjustment of those interests throughout the country.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] calls the attention of the House to the increased loans through the Federal reserve system during the period of agricultural deflation. By that citation he seeks to convey the idea that the agricultural interests had funds available simply because the Federal reserve system had a larger amount of loans outstanding. His assumption in this matter is completely refuted by the fact that the farmers did not get the money and could not get the money. The further fact should also be noted that the farmers were compelled to turn over every dollar they could secure to the Federal reserve system. Then note the additional significant fact that the Federal reserve system put out larger amounts elsewhere. These facts give the assurance that the farmers did not get the money and also that the sugar speculators did get money that the farmers were entitled to receive.

These citations might be multiplied at almost indefinite length. Those already given, however, are sufficient to demonstrate the wisdom of placing a representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve Board.

I shall support this bill most heartily. I am in favor of eliminating the committee amendments and passing the bill substantially as it came to us from the Senate. Let us vote immediately; end debate; pass the bill; and thus hasten the appointment of a man on the Federal Reserve Board to represent the agricultural interests of the Nation.

OF

HON. HENCE JACOWAY,

OF ARKANSAS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 25, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the resolution (S. J. Res. 12) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, some one of the law writers has defined a trial as being "the judicial ascertainment of the truth." I paraphrase that definition this afternoon in addressing the committee, and say that a joint resolution of this character is a "congressional ascertainment of the truth."

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, gentlemen, I have gone into the testimony that was adduced relative to this claim, both before the committee of the Senate and before my own committee, and I am driven unalterably to the conclusion, beyond peradventure of a doubt, that the integrity of the Federal Government is involved in your vote here to-day.

As I see it, holding this record up by its four corners, and viewing it in the absence of demagogery or camouflage, we are seeking only to ascertain the truth. In my judgment, every man who votes on this resolution, if he understands the testimony as I do, will cast his vote in the affirmative. I want to say also in the beginning that I have no senseless hostility against wealth. If it has been honestly earned, I admire and commend the man who has honestly earned it.

Now, the test here to-day, gentlemen of the committee, is whether or not wealth shall be penalized. If so, this resolution shall fail. During my 12 years' membership in this House I have noticed the comings and goings of the gentlemen of this House, and taking into consideration the plans and specifications upon which my fellow Members are builded, I say I believe that all of you are seekers after the truth, and want to know what the truth is, and when that truth has been evolved to your satisfaction you will let your vote reflect what you think is the truth.

There are some things in this resolution and in this testimony that are uncontradicted. The men who may follow me and those who have preceded me can not take this record and contradict it, and this is the plain fact. I am sure that my friend from Kansas and my friend from Texas have inadvertently misstated the facts as to the agency created on behalf of the Government for the purchase of this Argentine sugar. At the time the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell & Son Co. entered into this contract with the Department of State and the Department of Justice, Attorney General Palmer considered that he had the right and the legal authority to enter into this contract with these parties. Mr. Palmer in his testimony states, on page 38, House hearings, January, 1920:

> In the first place, the plan which was inaugurated was a perfectly proper one and a lawful one under the law. The President had the right, under the Lever Act, section 2, which gave him very large powers with respect to the securing of a supply and the control of the distribution of all of the necessaries of life, to enter into all voluntary arrangements or agreements, to create and use any agents or agencies, to accept the services of any persons without compensation, to cooperate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the Government, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of efforts or of funds. * * *
> I say it was a lawful plan, therefore, and a proper plan. I say also that it was a beneficial plan to the people of the country, and they got the benefit by it.

And on page 43 of the same hearings Attorney General Palmer further states:

> What I said was that the President under that section (section 2 of the Lever Act) was within his powers in utilizing the agency of the Department of Justice and of these gentlemen, B. H. Howell Son & Co., and the American Trading Corporation, to secure an adequate supply of sugar and an equitable distribution at a fair price. They are "agencies," and he could use any agencies that he saw fit.

Mr. Figg, the Assistant Attorney General, who handled the details of this transaction, stated that he felt the Department of Justice was empowered under section 2 of the Lever Act, and the proclamation of the President of November 21, 1919, transferring the powers of the Food Administration to the Department of Justice. (Hearings January, 1920, p. 77.)

The correspondence between the State Department and the Department of Justice and the cables to and from our embassy in Buenos Aires clearly show the authority and power of the Department of Justice to act in this matter was accepted without question by all Government officials concerned and by the agencies themselves.

B. H. Howell & Son Co. thought they had the right to enter into it, and they thought the Department of Justice was clothed with the proper authority. The American Trading Co. thought the same thing, and the chronology of this whole transaction when it is evolved and unfolded before you shows that this belief was thoroughly warranted, and that there was no camouflage or skullduggery in it, but that B. H. Howell Son & Co., in the person of Mr. Post, and the American Trading Co., in the actions they performed in this matter, were actuated by the highest degree of patriotism.

Mr. Franklin, whose testimony is unimpeachable, stated both before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Agriculture Committee of the House the history of this transaction in detail without any knowledge of the contents of the files of the State Department and Department of Justice in respect thereto. It is a remarkable thing to find now, when these records of these departments are available to members of the committee long after the testimony was completed, that they confirm absolutely and in detail the correctness of the statements made by Mr. Franklin.

My friend from Kansas in his remarks has stated that this matter was started by Mr. Franklin and some one from the Department of State bringing it to the attention of the Department of Justice, whereas, as a matter of fact, the whole matter arose in consequence of a cablegram dated April 1, 1920, from the American ambassador in Argentina to the Secretary of State, which reads as follows:

BUENOS AIRES, April 1, 1920.

SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

Important; 82, April 1, noon.

For Bureau Foreign Commerce. At my suggestion ambassador has discussed informally with Minister for Foreign Affairs possibility of lifting Argentine embargo on sugar export to permit shipment, whole or part, of 60,000 tons exportable surplus to States in view our shortage. Argentine might grant permission if request be made through State Department designating American firm or firms to arrange matters here with refineries. Klein.

STIMSON.

From this cablegram you will see that the situation in the Argentine was known in the State Department, and had been communicated to the Department of Justice nearly a month before Mr. Franklin had his conversation with officials of the State Department on other matters, during which this Argentine sugar matter was brought up. It was on April 27 that the matter was mentioned to him at the State Department, and the suggestion was made that the situation be discussed with officials of the Department of Justice. Nothing came of this preliminary discussion until a week or 10 days later, when Mr. Figg, of the Department of Justice, sent for Mr. Franklin, and they met for the first time on May 7, 1920. At this meeting Mr. Figg outlined the plans he had in mind, and asked that the American Trading Co. undertake to buy and import this sugar for the Government. Mr. Franklin was not even then satisfied with the information submitted, and asked that the data be further confirmed through the State Department and the American Embassy in Buenos Aires; and further stated that his company would not enter into the arrangement unless the Department of Justice selected a large and reputable firm to handle the distribution of the sugar in the United States.

After further confirming the information received from the State Department the Department of Justice wrote to the American Trading Co. on May 11, 1920, instructing them to buy as much sugar as possible, and stating that arrangements had been made with large interests to handle the distribution. The Department of Justice did not in this letter advise the American Trading Co. who these interests were, and it was not until later, as Mr. Figg stated in his testimony (January, 1920, hearings, p. 79), that he brought the two companies together.

These companies were selected to handle this matter on account of their large facilities and on account of the fact they could expedite this matter better than any other living agency under the American Government, and in view of the fact there was a crying need for a decrease in the price of one of the necessities of life, to wit, sugar, and an increase in the supplies.

My friend from Kansas has stated that there was an embargo in the Argentine at that time, under which modifications could be secured provided deposits of a certain kind of sugar, known as "pilet" sugar, were made with the Argentine Government. My friend has been led into a grievous error by confusing the situation which existed at that time with later developments. There was an absolute embargo upon the exportation of Argentine sugar, and not a single pound could be exported, and it was not until May 22 that a presidential decree was issued permitting the exportation of 100,000 tons of Argentine sugar, provided a deposit of "pilet" sugar equivalent to 30 per cent of the amount to be exported was withheld and deposited with officials of the Argentine Government under certain resale regulations prescribed by that Government. It should be clearly understood, gentlemen, that the entire amount of sugar acquired by these agents on behalf of the United States Government was bought prior to the promulgation of this decree.

I want to particularly impress upon you gentlemen that in these early cablegrams exchanged between the State Department and the American Embassy, and which were communicated to the Department of Justice, there is no mention made of contemplated requirement of this kind, and the arrangement made between these companies and these Government departments was not planned upon any such basis, as there was no intimation that the Argentine Government would impose any restrictions of any nature whatsoever upon the exportation of sugar to this country.

It should be further understood that this "pilet" type of sugar is of a different quality than that purchased by these agents for export to the United States and is of a character which is not used in this country and would not have been marketable here. As a result of the terms of this decree of May 22, the price of this pilet sugar rose rapidly, and to have required these agents to have purchased sufficient of the sugar to comply with the terms of the decree would have nullified the whole transaction and have defeated the plan of the Department of Justice and State Department. Let me read you the memorandum from the American ambassador to the Secretary of State dated June 11, 1920:

[Inclosure 1 in dispatch No. 1211.]

AIDE MEMOIRE.

I am instructed by my Government to make the friendly suggestion to your excellency in person that the Argentine Government permit the export of such sugar as was petitioned for by the Government of the United States prior to the recent decree of the Argentine Government (30,000 tons), or at least such amount as has actually been purchased by my Government (14,000 tons), relying on its understanding with the Argentine foreign office, which was kept fully advised of the action of the United States Government throughout.

It does not appear to my Government that the recent decree requiring the deposit of a particular type (pilet) sugar to the extent of 30 per cent of the amount exported should fairly be applied to sugar bought before this decree, relying on the supposition that permission to export would be given without conditions. The United States Government has purchased only sugar of the type known as white granulated; it has no pilet sugar and can procure none at a reasonable price, and hence can not comply with this condition.

I am instructed particularly to say that my Government would not have asked permission to export sugar had the conditions of the decree been foreseen, and to call your excellency's attention to the fact that the petition to export the sugar now in question was filed on behalf of the United States Government by the American Trading Co. some days before the decree, so that to apply to the export of this sugar the conditions of this later decree is, in the view of my Government, retroactive. The formal petition to export the first quantity of sugar was delivered by my secretary personally to the Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs on the 20th of May, but it was first intimated to myself as far back as the 1st of April by the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Argentine Government would look favorably on a permission to export sugar to the United States if made by my Government officially, and early in May I was instructed that my Government would make official request for the export of this lot of sugar on receiving assurance from the foreign office that such a request would have a favorable reception. This assurance was given to my secretary, Mr. Russell, by the Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs on the 10th of May.

I am instructed further to add that the sole desire of my Government in this matter has been to secure the use of as much sugar as the Argentine Government can spare, having consideration for the needs of its own people, for distribution among the people of the United States, and that this distribution will be supervised by the American Department of Justice in order to avoid the interposition of speculators. Should the permission to export this sugar now on hand not be given, or even greatly delayed, my Government would be subject to great loss or damage, either by a forced resale of the sugar at a price below its actual cost or the indefinite storage of the same, which would be of injury to the sugar, besides precluding the worthy motives with which the United States Government undertook these negotiations.

Buenos Aires, June 11, 1920.

It is clearly apparent from this communication that there was no attempt to favor the American Trading Co. by securing a modification of the embargo, but on the other hand the United States Government was acting through its official representative to secure the sugar on behalf of the American people.

There is another uncontradicted fact that the record discloses beyond peradventure of a doubt, not as the result of hearsay, but mathematically calculated, and the figures will testify to what I am saying, that as a result of the activities of the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell & Son Co. the price of sugar was so reduced in this country that a billion dollars or more was saved to the American people.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. I will be glad to.

Mr. CLOUSE. How much of the sugar purchased in the Argentine was brought to this country before the price broke?

Mr. JACOWAY. I do not believe any of it was.

Mr. CLOUSE. As a matter of fact all of their purchasing transactions were closed on May 22, and the embargo lasted until the 23d of June.

Mr. JACOWAY. I see what the gentleman is leading up to. I can not remember the dates, but I will say to the gentleman in answer to his question that I know it was a condition precedent on the part of the Department of Justice and on the part of the officials of the Department of State, when they said to B. H. Howell & Son Co. and the American Trading Co.: "If you will go to Argentina and act as our agents in this matter, both as purchasing agents and distributing agents, we give you the solemn word of the American Government that the embargo on that sugar is lifted immediately." And acting in obedience to the promise of the State Department and also the Department of Justice these people went there and bought that sugar, but the Department of Justice was unable to get the embargo lifted for a period of 1 month and 13 days, and during that time the papers in New York and elsewhere were full of the report that great amounts of sugar were coming into this country, and the result was that the price of sugar broke, and before they could get that sugar into the United States a loss was sustained.

I say to you, gentlemen of this House, assuming that they were agents of the Federal Government, when the Federal Government through its duly accredited agents said, "I will get that embargo lifted," and then failed to do it, and the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell & Son Co. sustained a loss as a result of it, this is a compelling reason for the Federal Government to now pay those losses.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement.

Mr. JACOWAY. I refuse to yield, unless just for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JACOWAY. I will ask for additional time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WARD of New York. How much time?

Mr. JACOWAY. Five minutes.

Mr. WARD of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas five minutes more.

Mr. RAKER. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was how could they be the agents of the Government if they bought, paid for, and handled the sugar in their own names and disposed of it in their own names?

Mr. JACOWAY. I will in answer to that say that at the time this transaction was entered into there was nothing said as to the question of whose name it should be bought in. These people stated they could finance the proposition, and they did it. And in further answer to the argument laid down by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], in which he said they expected to make a million dollars on this transaction, the record in this case writes an eternal traverse upon that proposition. I state to you that the maximum amount that the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell & Son. Co. could make out of this transaction would be $140,000 and the minimum $70,000. Under their contract with the Federal Government through its agents they agreed to handle the sugar for 1 cent per pound gross for buying it and 1 cent per pound gross for distributing it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. According to the testimony, they purchased 31,156,000 pounds of sugar.

Mr. JACOWAY. The gentleman will get it by computation. If you will take 14,000 tons of sugar and multiply it by 2,000 pounds to the ton——

Mr. JONES of Texas. According to their own statement on page 22 of the Franklin brief, they purchased 13,900 tons of sugar, which at 2,240 pounds to the ton is equivalent to 31,156,000 pounds, and at 1 cent a pound that is $311,000 to the American Trading Co. and a similar amount to B. H. Howell & Son Co.

Mr. JACOWAY. That was gross. My statement is that the maximum amount that B. H. Howell & Son Co. could make out of this would be $140,000 and the minimum would be $70,000, and I will figure it to the gentlemen in this way. If you will take a pencil in hand and put down 14,000 tons of sugar and multiply by 2,000 pounds to the ton——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Two thousand two hundred and forty pounds to the ton.

Mr. JACOWAY. Then if he will multiply that by one-quarter of a cent he will get the figures I have arrived at. Mr. Post testified that his net profit on all of these transactions was one-quarter of a cent per pound.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield for a brief question?

Mr. JACOWAY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the natural effect of the lifting of the embargo, which these people requested, be to lower the price of sugar?

Mr. JACOWAY. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. In regard to this controversy about the number of pounds in a ton——

Mr. JACOWAY. I was counting 2,000 pounds to a ton.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I think it is a metric ton of 2,204 pounds.

Mr. JACOWAY. Then there would be that difference between 2,000 pounds and 2,204 pounds, and to this extent I am in error.

There is one other point to which I wish to direct your particular attention, because it ranks next in importance to the failure of the Government departments to secure the prompt lifting of the Argentine embargo as one of the reasons for the loss. When the drop in the price of sugar in the market here came as a result of publicity given these importations and it became apparent to all concerned that a loss would inevitably ensue, it was suggested to the Department of Justice and the State Department that a portion of the sugar be resold in Argentina, where the market had materially advanced. The United States Government prevented such resale in Argentina.

My friend from Kansas and my friend from Kentucky both misconstrue the facts when they state that this Government gave permission to these agents to resell the sugar in Argentina. If you will refer to the letter of the Department of Justice to the American Trading Co., dated August 2, 1920, you will find they were absolutely refused permission to resell the sugar in Argentina.

In connection with this refusal I want to read to you a telegram which was sent by the State Department to the American ambassador in Buenos Aires on July 29, 1920. It reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE TO THE AMERICAN EMBASSY AT BUENOS AIRES, JULY 30, 1920.

[Paraphrase.]

Reference is made to the telegram of the embassy at Buenos Aires under date of July 29, 11 p. m.

The American Trading Co. has been advised by the Attorney General that it should not allow any of the sugar purchased in the Argentine Republic, and amounting to the figure of 14,000 tons, to be sold in the Argentine Republic. In case the embassy finds that rumors are prevailing that the American Trading Co. has been allowed to sell the embassy may point out in a statement communicated to the newspapers that all of the above sugar purchased in the Argentine has been purchased for use in the United States.

In spite of the definite refusal contained in letter of August 2, the situation was so serious that a further effort was made by these agents to have the United States Government dispose of this sugar remaining in Argentina, and as a result the Secretary of State cabled the American Embassy on August 12 as follows:

(Paraphrase of cablegram.)

To: American Embassy at Buenos Aires, Argentina.
Dated: August 12, 6 p. m.
Number: 88.

Reference is made to your No. 185 of August 6 and No. 186 of August 9.

1. If approved by Sullivan, convey to the Government of Argentina that this Government desires to state again its appreciation of its favor in permitting the export of sugar to relieve necessities in this country; and that since the situation in the United States has been remedied in large measure through the courteous act of the Argentine Government and at the same time the market in Argentina appears to be suffering from a sugar shortage, this Government would be glad to resell to the Argentine Government, if it so desires, or on the market under its supervision, such quantities of sugar which have not already been exported to the United States; that the sugar is offered at 16 cents United States currency and amounts to 4,383 tons. You may explain to the Argentine Government, if you think advisable, that the stated price is placed somewhat above purchase price in order to cover expenditures incidental to its handling, purchase, and storage.

2. Please be careful to avoid giving impression which you warned against in your cablegram of July 29, No. 178. (Signed) COLBY.

This offer evidently was given careful consideration by the Argentine Government, as a reply was not received until August 23, reading as follows:

(Paraphrase of cablegram.)

STATE DEPARTMENT, Washington.
No. 196 of August 23, 6 p. m.

I have been told by the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Argentine Government, while appreciating the kindness of the United States Government in making this offer, it prefers that the sugar shall be shipped to the United States as already arranged, since the permit therefor has been granted.

There has been appointed a congressional committee to investigate the subject of the exportation of sugar from Argentina and doubtless there will be several (scrapes?).

I believe that the sale to (by) the American Trading Co. here of any of the sugar may lead to unfavorable criticism. Sullivan will ship 1,500 tons by the Arabic.

(Signed) WADSWORTH.

Gentlemen, while there may be some doubt that this is a legal claim, yet it is a highly moral claim. Attorney General Daugherty, Ex-Attorney General Palmer, and State Department officials all agree in that; but there are other debts that the Federal Government should pay, saving and excepting legal debts and moral debts. The Supreme Court of the United States in passing on that question construed, in the case of United States v. Realty Company (163 U. S. 427), wherein Mr. Justice Peckham says:

Under the provisions of the Constitution Congress has power "to pay the 'debts' of the United States. * * *" What are the debts of the United States within the meaning of the constitutional provisions? "It is conceded and, indeed, it can not be questioned, that the debts are not limited to those which are evidenced by some written obligation or to those which are otherwise of a strictly legal character. The term 'debt' includes those debts or claims which rest upon a merely equitable or honorary obligation and which would not be recoverable in a court of law if existing against an individual. The Nation, broadly speaking, owes a 'debt' to an individual when his claim grows out of general principles of right and justice; when, in other words, it is based upon considerations of a moral or merely honorary nature, such as are binding on the conscience or the honor of the individual, although the debt could obtain no recognition in a court of law."

That, gentlemen of the committee, is the foundation upon which this claim rests. I was never more convinced in my life than I am of the purpose of the United States Government and the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell & Son Co. in entering into this contract, because every time you get back to the facts in the record it shows that the Department of Justice, the Department of State, B. H. Howell & Son Co., and the American Trading Co. all thought they had the right to enter into this contract in order to reduce the price of sugar. It was never conceived by B. H. Howell & Son Co. and the American Trading Co. that if they lost on this sugar but what they would be freely reimbursed by the Federal Government, because their compensation was fixed in the beginning. I cent a pound for the purchase and I cent a pound for the distribution. They were agents hopelessly bound by specific instructions from their principal, the Federal Government, and could exercise no will of their own at any time, nor in any respect. Gentlemen, I do not know anything of B. H. Howell & Son Co. I know no member of the firm except Mr. Post. I am not acquainted with the American Trading Co., except Mr. Franklin, but I say this is an honest and just claim on the Federal Government, and I hope the resolution will prevail when the vote is taken. [Applause.]

OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, July 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from The Adjutant General's office, dated June 30, 1922.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 30, 1922.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 5, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between May 5 and June 4, 1922, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith, for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Acting The Adjutant General.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

284 Victor Althouse, 735 Clifford Street, Portsmouth, Va.

LOCAL BOARD FOR COUNTY OF NIOBRARA, STATE OF WYOMING.

498 Roy James McGuire, Lusk, Wyo. (Maginn Hot Creek, Wyo.).

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local bourds named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which for any of the aforementioned reasons should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should for any of these reasons likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

OF

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 22, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (S. 2919) to extend for the period of two years the provisions of Title II of the food control and District of Columbia rent act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the bill under consideration to-day is a bill that is familiar to practically all the Members of the House. It is known as the rent act. It passed the Senate, came to the House, and was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which committee has had extensive hearings; in fact, the District of Columbia Committee made it rather a series of field days for those who were opposed to the bill. Many prominent real-estate brokers, as well as a number of property owners, appeared and voiced their objections to this bill. They presented some objections which seemed to the committee to deserve consideration, and, so far as I am able to judge from the expressions of those whom the committee heard, the Senate bill as finally amended by the House committee practically eliminates all the objectionable features that were pointed out at the hearings by men who own property or control property for rental purposes in the District of Columbia.

This bill is not presented as a war emergency. It has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, which court held it to be constitutional, not as a war emergency bill but as legislation under the "police" and "welfare" guaranties of our Constitution. Under the police powers recognized by the courts of our country similar legislation has been enacted in the State of New York, and that legislation as well as this has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. Now, as I have already said, those who opposed this bill had what the committee thought were some valid objections. For example, it was held that a man who purchased property, to use it for himself or his dependents, found it practically impossible to get possession of his property. I feel sure the committee amendment to the Senate bill will help that situation. They complained of the long delays in the settlement of questions. I think we have remedied that condition by increasing the membership of the Rent Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I will yield for a short question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am very much in sympathy with the bill, and what I am very much interested to know is, do the hearings disclose such a condition in the city of Washington that makes it necessary for us to invoke the welfare clause of the Constitution relating to the promotion of the health, morals, and so forth, of the people?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The committee have said so in their report, and from their investigation they found conditions existing here that in the opinion of the committee——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That it is necessary, in order to promote the health and morals, and so forth, of the people, to enact this law?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. That it is a measure coming under that clause——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The welfare clause of the Constitution?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Yes. Several years ago the Legislature of Illinois passed a law regulating the charges and fees for the use of grain elevators. At once the owners protested and said that was unconstitutional; that they were built by private citizens for the use of farmers, and they had a right to fix the rates; but the Supreme Court of the United States said that the housing or the storage of the grain of the farmers in the country was a function "clothed with a public interest," and as such the court upheld it. They say that by this measure we are invading the property rights of the people. My colleagues, property rights have been invaded long ago in the interest of the public welfare. It was once thought that it was an unreasonable thing to pass laws regulating the amount that could be charged for putting cattle in a cattle car and transporting the car across country, but the Supreme Court approved legislation regulating such charges and rates. It was held that it was very obnoxious to regulate the contract of a private insurance company, but to-day laws sustained by the Supreme Court are absolutely dictating the contracts of the insurance companies of this country. We regulate interest charges, we regulate the height of public buildings. These have all been passed upon by the courts and recognized as legitimate subjects for supervision and control by law, because they are clothed with a public interest.

If it is lawful to regulate the charges for cattle housed and transported in a railroad car, why is it not lawful to regulate the prices charged for housing human beings who are here in the District doing work for the Government?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Just for a question.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the morals of the community were involved by the passage of this Ball Rent Act; that if it were not passed it would affect the morals of the community?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. That is not a violent presumption.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. May I ask the gentleman from West Virginia of what he spoke? That is what I understood, but I probably was wrong.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It is a subject clothed with such a public interest that Congress has the right to pass remedial legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If the gentleman will yield, what I intended to call the gentleman's attention to was that if a condition existed that affected the health, morals, and social conditions of the people, then they would have a right to enact this law under the welfare clause of the Constitution. Now, is there such a congested state in this city that people are affected in their health and morals and general social conditions? Does such a condition exist here?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. In connection with that, may I ask this question: Referring to the News of Saturday, I find there an interview with one of the members of the commission, Mrs. Taylor, in which the paper makes her say that if this amendment to the rent law is not passed we will have women workers of a less scrupulous type here than we have at the present time. You do not subscribe to that, do you?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The lady has a right to express her opinion and my colleague has the privilege of dissenting.

I want to explain why the majority of the committee feel that this bill is a necessity at this time and refer to the objectionable features that have been referred to by men who own real estate. First, as to the possession of property. This bill makes it possible where a man desires to tear down property and improve it, and whether it is for business purposes or otherwise, if he can show a legitimate reason for taking possession of his property, the commission will grant him that privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman from West Virginia think the committee is making very much of a concession when it would yield the right to a property owner to reconstruct his own property? You speak as though that was a great concession.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The machinery and provisions of the old law made that difficult. The committee has amended the Senate bill in such a manner as will render it unobjectionable and absolutely fair to the owner.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does this leave it so that there can be no question as to the right of the property owner to alter or change his own property?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. If it is not for the sole purpose of ousting one tenant to put another in. The owner must show good faith.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The burden would be upon him to show that it was not derogatory to the interest of the person occupying the place; that he had no purpose except that of altering his property?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. He might want to change his property from an apartment to a purely business property. He would have that right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Do you not think that is making a great concession here in the United States to a property owner?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Well, that is one of the objections to the present law which the bill as amended seeks to remedy. As to other changes in the bill, the realtor or owner may apply to the commission for the raising of rents where they are too low. The remedy is given for both the owner and the tenant.

Many complaints have been made relative to profiteering by subtenants. The old law was probably deficient as to that matter. The bill as amended reaches the subtenant and will enable the owner and the commission to correct many injustices that have heretofore existed. In protecting the rights of the property owner in the collection of his rent, the amended bill takes care of that situation in a manner that is fair to all parties.

The drastic penalties that were objected to as being severe and unreasonable have been changed, the court is given authority to punish in cases of contempt proceedings, and so forth, within the discretion of the court. The committee after extensive hearings feels that we have here in the District of Columbia an exigency that demands the continuation of what is known as the Ball Rent Act as amended.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. For a short question.

Mr. BLANTON. Answering the question of the gentleman from Kansas, when an owner comes in and claims that he wants the property for his own possession and the tenant denies that is the fact, then it becomes an issuable matter before the court as to whether the owner can produce the preponderance of testimony?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Controversies of that kind are sometimes carried to the court. That may happen in connection with almost any transaction.

I want to say a few words in commendation of hundreds of property owners and real estate men in the District of Columbia who have never at any time engaged in profiteering in rents. They are honorable, high-minded, loyal Americans, and during the entire war period many of them made no increase whatever in the rents charged their tenants. If all landlords and property owners were of this class there would be no need of a rent commission. But I regret to say there is another class that can not be described by temperate language. They have engaged in the most outlandish and dastardly profiteering. They have harassed the poor and bled the thrifty. Their mercenary instincts have made them shameless and unblushing villains.

The hearings on this bill have brought out some interesting observations. The real estate brokers say that if they wanted to be selfish they would ask for the continuation of this law. They claim that its operation enables them to sell houses at exorbitant prices and by limiting rental properties makes it incumbent upon the erstwhile tenants to purchase at the prevailing high prices. Therefore they want the law abolished in order to protect the tenants and curb the epidemic of selling at high prices.

Yet no victim of the high-selling iniquity appeared before the committee to complain, while hundreds pleaded for rent regulation.

It has been claimed by other opponents of the measure that it retarded the growth of Washington, but on every hand appears unmistakable evidence that never before have there been such extensive building operations as at present. In every direction you will find houses by the hundreds going up. And my prediction to-day is that this bill will pass and the erection of houses will be even greater during the coming year than ever before. But we are told that these houses are all being sold, not rented. How fortunate for Washington if that is true. Think of it. A city of home owners. The home owner is the glory of a city. He paints and improves his home. He plants shrubs and flowers on the lawn. He is a taxpayer. He is a good, safe customer for the merchant and grocer. Having property, he must pay his bills.

One very prominent and well-informed citizen of the District appeared before the committee and urged that this bill be not passed, because it would "keep rents up." He said he wanted to see Washington become a city of home owners. Well, if the brokers are correct as to the great wave of home buying he is getting just what he wants.

It is said that Members would not sanction this kind of legislation for their home communities. Well, suppose we put the question in its proper form—give it its true setting. Let us say to Clarksburg, W. Va., Omaha, or even Kansas City, that it is proposed to locate at any one of these cities the seat of government of the United States, bringing to that city the thousands of Government workers, whose pay is regular, with no interruption by strikes, hard times, or market conditions.

There would also go as an accompaniment the world's greatest library; the Government's wonderful executive, legislative, diplomatic, judicial, and scientific functions. But tell them that before these things can come to them they must submit to legislation that will not permit profiteering in house rentals or returns upon investments in dwellings in excess of 8 per cent. Can you guess what action the people would take relative to a proposition of that kind? It is said that fully 75 per cent of the people residing in Washington obtain their living directly or indirectly through the various activities of the Government. If property owners here are permitted to continue the increasing of rents it will be absolutely necessary to raise the pay of the thousands of employees here to enable them to live and stay in the service. That will mean, my colleagues, that my constituents in West Virginia and yours will have to bear an additional burden of millions of dollars in added taxation, which will go into the pockets of profiteering landlords in Washington.

This small area called the District of Columbia was ceded to the United States for just one purpose—to be the seat of government of this Republic. Read what the Constitution says about it. It was set apart, not for private enterprises, not for great factories, not for smoking iron industries, but for a place where this Government could erect its public buildings and carry on the activities necessary to its existence.

Any condition or propaganda or instrumentality—any use of private property that operates here to embarrass the Government by harassing its employees or to hamper it in the orderly, economic, and efficient administration of its many departments, becomes a subject, in the language of the Supreme Court, "clothed with a public interest" calling for proper remedial legislation.

The people of all the States are interested in this matter. No other plot of earth in all Christendom resembles the District of Columbia in its origin and government. Congress has absolute control over it. The laws will permit you to condemn and take land for public and even quasi-public purposes almost anywhere under the flag except in the District of Columbia, where the executive, legislative, and judicial life of the Republic is nurtured and sustained.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the balance of my time of one hour, and then I shall yield to my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] 30 minutes, which he has the privilege of further yielding to his colleagues who are opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time and yields 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

OF
HON. JOHN E. RAKER,
OF CALIFORNIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 27, 1922.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, on April 18, 1921, in the first session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, I introduced the bill H. R. 4097, creating the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list. Similar bills have been introduced by me in prior Congresses. Every effort has been made to have this legislation enacted into law, and I have great hopes for it before this Congress finally adjourns. I submit a letter by Mr. H. P. Smith, which is as follows:

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS OF THE CIVIL WAR—DISREGARD OF CONGRESS'S FIRM PROMISES TO THEM.

EDITOR OF NATIONAL TRIBUNE: In your issue of March 2 I read in the article by N. O. Messenger that "the drift of opinion appears to be toward passing the legislation (adjusted compensation measure) first, letting the payment take care of itself, and the claim is made that this will create a 'moral obligation' which no Congress and no political party can in the future dare to default upon."

No use in talking that stuff to an old volunteer officer of the Civil War. He knows better. I have before me a copy of the old Army Regulations which I carried through the war, in which I find extracts of laws passed by Congress regarding the enlistment of volunteers, which read as follows:

"Sec. 5. Officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates shall in all respects be placed on the footing as to pay and allowances of similar corps of the Regular Army.

"Sec. 6. That any volunteer who may be wounded or otherwise disabled in the service shall be entitled to the benefits which have been or may be conferred on persons disabled in the Regular service."

This act of Congress was approved July 22, 1861.

Another act of Congress, approved July 25, 1861. Section 2 reads: "That the volunteers authorized by this act shall be armed as the President may direct.

"They shall be subject to the Rules and Articles of War, and shall be in all respects on the same footing with similar corps of the United States Army."

Again, on April 23, 1904, Congress passed another act, allowing the President to retire any officer of the Regular service below the rank of brigadier general who had served with the volunteer forces during the Civil War with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that held in actual service.

This was a reward or bonus for his service with the volunteers. If the volunteers did the most of the fighting—which they did—why ignore them in this scheme of retired promotion?

Remember, Congress says they are to be in all respects treated as the Regulars.

Does this situation indicate that any Congress or any political party will now or at any future time recognize any moral or legal obligation attached to the above acts of Congress in 1861?

Under the act of 1904 hundreds of officers have been retired, and retired at this advanced rank.

Has anything been done for the volunteer officer in recognition of his services, which seem to have been considered so meritorious in a Regular? Nothing. He is demoted, deprived of all rank, is getting a pension for old age (no special honor attached to that). Any fool will grow old.

With this treatment of the old volunteer officer of the Civil War as a sample of the binding quality of any moral, or even legal, obligation of Congress, the Legion boys will be a little shy.

Think they would prefer 50-cent greenbacks, such as were paid the boys of '61.

H. P. SMITH,
Second Berdan's Sharpshooters, Madison, S. Dak.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN S. BENHAM,
OF INDIANA.
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 30, 1922.

Mr. BENHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following comprehensive statement prepared by a woman of my State:

(By Mrs. Florence Riddick Boys, of Plymouth, Ind.)

WHY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY APPEALS TO WOMEN.

Whether we are of the women who have achieved suffrage, or of those who have had it thrust upon us, is small concern to-day. What does matter is the use we shall make of it now that it is to be ours.

Standing at the portal of politics, where government is in the making, a strange and little understood piece of paper has been placed in our hands. Its very unfamiliarity makes us a trifle afraid of it. But it is a thing not to be despised. It was purchased for us by the blood of our noblest ancestors. Since the beginning of government the peoples have wrestled and died in the age-long effort to wrench the ballot—the say so—away from tyrants and aristocrats and to gain it for themselves.

With the progress of freedom, the governing power has been ever more widely distributed; it has passed away from the few until we have reached that form of freedom in which each adult individual has a copartnership in government. The enfranchisement of women—the last class to share the control—marks the culmination of the ancient struggle.

WHAT IS IT?

This ballot in our hands is the scepter wrestled from kings. It is a hereditary weapon to defend our country, our home, our rights against those who would encroach. It is an instrument to help shape this our ever plastic Government. It is a chisel to grave upon the tables of our commandments those high principles which we deem inviolable. It is a voice to make our viewpoint heard when great issues are at stake. It is a lever to lift the burdens from the backs of little children, to lighten the load for women in industry, to relieve the oppressed, to raise to higher standards the environment of us all.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH IT?

The traditional functions of women have been wife, mother, sister, wage earner, purchaser, member of society. It is not probable that the ballot will greatly change our aims and ambitions. We will still endeavor, in a larger way, to accomplish these, our chief concerns. Our voting will express our broader housekeeping, caring as well for the affairs of our community and our country as for those within our four square walls.

Woman's interest in the State is not new. A few women have always cared for public affairs. Roman women organized to secure desired legislation. Pericles, Caesar, Washington, and Napoleon not infrequently sought women's advice on affairs of state.

Mary and Martha were interested in the world awakening of their day. It is not the type of woman who is new; it is only that through our clubs, our charities, our large war activities we have awakened ourselves to broader sympathies and trained ourselves in teamwork. We realize that obligation is only limited by the opportunity and the need.

As we have not shirked our duties of housekeeping, so we will not neglect this, our real duty, of citizenship. Ninety-nine out of every hundred problems are sexless, and their solution cries out to us as to our men.

We know that with that direct means, the ballot, our efforts will accomplish infinitely greater results; that where we helped 30 through charity, we may now help 3,000 or 3,000,000 through the Government.

LIKE A SOLDIER.

Women care for the welfare of their country as true heartedly as does the soldier into whose unaccustomed hands Uncle Sam places a gun. When the time comes for action, he does not hesitate and debate: "Shall I use this weapon? It is new and unfamiliar to me. Let those who like this sort of thing take advantage of it. It is not of my seeking. My place is on the farm. I am a quiet, nonaggressive man. I do pretty well if I attend to my own business. I can find plenty to do if I stick to the plow." Our boys wasted no time in such dawdling as that. They accepted the new tool purposefully and sprang with it over the top.

So we patriotic women of America feel our handclasp tighten eagerly about the ballot. We are resolved to use it for our country with the best brain and best impulse God has given us.

THE WEIGHT OF IT.

We realize that the ballot of the humblest of us is worth as much as that of the mightiest. If a woman of conscience casts her ballot and some vicious person does not, she has tallied one for good. If both vote, she has neutralized the ill. If the good woman neglects to vote and the evil vote is cast, then the good woman has stood indifferently by while an enemy of her country has given it a hurtful thrust.

TO BE OR NOT TO BE NONPARTISAN.

With that open sesame, the ballot in our hands, the doors of politics swing wide. At first glance within, we are confused by the manifold issues at stake. Great political parties sue for our favor. In doubt which to choose, we are tempted to choose neither—to be nonpartisan.

We enjoy the new experience of being politically sought after—the feeling that we are not "lined up." But we must take a sober second thought: What is the ballot for?

As a free lance no woman can hope to accomplish anything. Our country is sure to be governed by one or the other of our two great political parties. Our greatest service to government can only be by helping to build up that political party which we feel is most able to direct its affairs wisely.

Nonpartisanship is the no man's land of politics. Giving allegiance to no party, we have influence with neither. Only by whole-hearted loyalty will we earn the right to help shape policies. To be nonpartisan is to be nonentity.

THE WHY OF POLITICAL PARTIES.

Political parties are to give coherence to the ideals of a people. Without them the multiplicity of voices would result in chaos. It is a good thing to have in a political party men and women of many minds, some more conservative, some more radical, some placing emphasis here, some there, each contributing his viewpoint and making his demands; each claiming and guarding his rights; each relinquishing somewhat his personal preferences that all may unite in one swelling chorus on principles so big, so broad, so vital as to appeal simultaneously to millions of citizens the country over.

Myriad-eyed, such a party will look well on all sides of every question. Its platform will be strong, sound, just, and wise. Its progress will be slower and less spasmodic than the ardent reformer might wish, but it will be steady and sure.

Such a party is big enough to embrace all of our several cults. If these are important enough to make a wide appeal, there is always the chance that we may write them into our party platform. If not, it is the chief beauty of our free Government that no pet scheme of the few can be foisted upon an unwilling multitude.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE.

No woman should choose her party because her husband, father, or brother belongs to that party. If a woman's vote is to be worth anything, it must be her own free moral conviction and best judgment. There is no advantage in merely duplicating the votes we now have.

When each vote expresses the viewpoint, needs, and ideals of its voter, then shall our country be the land of the free, a government of and by all the people, and each vote will be a contribution to the composite whole.

DOES NOT REQUIRE OMNISCIENCE.

In casting her ballot each woman may well use all the intelligence at her command; but voting wisely does not require a liberal college education so much as it does common sense plus attention to the main issues of the day.

Woman, overawed by the problems before the State and her limited knowledge of many of them, may be comforted by the assurance that only a few of these come before the people for decision at any one election. About these few, if she applies herself, she may readily become informed.

To vote intelligently women will not need to know everything about the tariff and international law. No man does. I was pleased to find the following from Abraham Lincoln:

"I do not know much about the tariff, but I know this much: When we buy manufactured goods abroad, we get the goods and the foreigner gets the money; when we buy manufactured goods at home, we get both the goods and the money."

Many of our bombastic economic terms are handles for truths as simple as that and as easily reducible if we look them squarely in the face.

Woman, who has been successfully wife, mother, seamstress, laundress, cook, baker, entertainer, educator, child trainer, and social criterion, will find the referendum no more difficult than the balanced diet nor politics than household management.

One by one as they arise these questions may be studied. No one needs to master all politics at once.

A HELPING GUIDE.

Because of woman's newness in the political field it is especially desirable that her inexperience be supplemented somewhat by party direction. Our ballots will be more certain to be well cast if we vote with the party whose judgments in the past have proven wisest, the party which has had most experience in guiding satisfactorily affairs of state, whose tendencies are in the main most reliable. Women know that this party is the Republican Party, and they feel its irresistible appeal.

LIKE CHOOSING A HUSBAND.

Choosing one's party is much like choosing one's husband; and no chit of a girl but feels herself, unaided, capable of doing that? In selecting the man with whom a woman will affiliate in all the purposes dearest to her heart she does not question explicitly into every petty detail of his opinion. She judges him by the big, salient features of his character. She asks herself not what are his views about the best cure for measles, but she satisfies herself that his motives are sincere, his character worthy, his judgment sound, his ambitions lofty, his industry unflagging, and his common sense evident. Convinced of these, she leaves the discovery of trifles to occasion. If he is the right sort, she feels safe in espousing him "for better or for worse," knowing full well that in the days to come he will use the same wisdom and resourcefulness that he has shown in the past.

PARTY TRAITS.

Parties, like individuals, have distinguishing traits. These may be easily found out by any new voter who will honestly try.

By these characteristics and not by their promises parties should be judged. To woman each party, the wooer, will now make its most pleasing appeal. Like a youth who, to the astonishment of his mother and sister, has suddenly become aware of his hairbrush and necktie, each political party will dress with care to sue for the favor of our sex.

Her suitors will now represent themselves to have always had so high an opinion of woman as to have been willing to trust her—even with the ballot! Both will now claim to have always been creatures of sobriety, repudiating the saloon and the gambling den. Both will now pose as virile athletes, not "too proud to fight" for home and native land.

But our memory is long. We remember that woman suffrage became an acute national issue in 1914, and was smothered by two Democratic Congresses. We women remember that when a Republican Congress came into power it passed the woman-suffrage amendment before it had been in session two weeks, and that of the first 24 States to ratify this 20 were Republican. We women remember that of the 36 States which finally ratified the amendment 29 were Republican and only 7 Democratic and that only 1 Republican State voted to reject the amendment, whereas 8 Democratic States so voted.

PARTY PLATFORMS.

It is a creditable thing for great political parties to state frankly the principles for which they stand. The party which is afraid to show its hand "open and above board" is the party "which loves darkness rather than light, because its deeds are evil."

Party platforms should be considered by every voter as guideposts indicating the main direction to which those parties tend. But to determine the real character of a party, its history is more reliable than its platform. Granting the sincerity of a party's program, its ability if put in authority to carry out the same into practical working laws is a factor to be reckoned with—its force, its capacity, its experience.

In studying the platform of any party, another consideration, which may at first seem trivial, is really important; that is, What are this party's chances of election to authority? No matter how delectable an air castle a party platform may depict, its beautiful pictures are worthless blue prints unless that party gets into power to construct according to those specifications. Its outlook for success is not to be despised in deciding with which party one has most chance to be an influence for good.

THE G. O. P.

Loyal Republicans call their party the "grand old party"—the G. O. P.

The Republican Party has always gone before the people with a clearly defined program. There is nothing "gum shoe" about the G. O. P. The people have known exactly what to expect when they put the Republican Party into power. Compare this with the vacillating policy of the recent Democratic administration, of which the people never knew what to expect next. Its "note"able uncertainty with Germany and Mexico were the chagrin of our Nation.

Throughout the history of the Republican Party from the beginning a consistent program and unity of policy has marked it. It has never been a "pussyfooter." The Republican Party has not only had the courage to make promises but it has had the finer courage to enact these promises into law.

THE RESULTS OF COURAGE.

In the past 60 years, since the birth of the Republican Party, there have only been six years of absolute Democratic control. During only 6 years out of 62 have both President and Congress been Democratic. Of the 14 Presidents since the Civil War, only 2 have been Democrats.

Why this confidence in the Republican Party? Because that party has redeemed its promises. "You can fool all the people some of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

The recent phenomenon of two Democratic administrations came about only because the Republican Party, in struggling to raise its banners to a still higher standard, split into two camps—for a time. This gave the minority party a chance for an inning.

WE DO NOT EXPECT PERFECTION.

Women do not look for perfection in choosing a party. The Republican Party is a human institution. It makes no claim to infallibility. There is glory in righting oneself when wrongs are discovered. By its mistakes—and these have never been serious nor long continued—the Republican Party has gained experience and learned wisdom.

A study of the history of the Republican Party shows that it has stood foursquare and true on the right side of every important issue for the past 62 years. One can not help but be amazed at its brilliant record of far-seeing statesmanship, of wise judgments, and of successful administration.

A PARTY OF GROWING IDEALS.

The Republican Party has been and is a party of growing ideals. Its standards have been and are becoming higher. Step by step the party has progressed and is still progressing. This is evident to the women of America, and it is this upward trend of the Republican Party which elicits their admiration and support.

GREAT LEADERS.

Political platforms may sound equally lofty. No party ever laid before the electors a written program of vice, graft, extravagance of chicanery. The truism "what you are speaks so loudly I can not hear what you say," applies as well to political parties as to individuals. Women judge the political parties by their personnel. What sort of men unite to form this party? What are their standards, characters, attainments, foresight, ability, and force?

Herein lies the strength of the Republican Party. Here is the answer to the query why the Republican Party appeals to women. Among its leaders, consider two—Lincoln and Roosevelt. Their spirit is bound to be the inspiration of those who shall "carry on" and usher in the still more glorious day about to dawn for the after-war America. Can women mistake in espousing a party thus inspired and thus led? If you wish to see Republican Party government, behold America! From Lincoln's inauguration in 1861 until Wilson's in 1913 there had been but one Democratic President and only two years of complete Democratic control. This 50 years of amazing prosperity and advancement is the product of Republican Party government.

PRESERVED THE UNION.

Born in 1856, when the Union was threatened with dissolution, the Republican Party stood for strong central government; while the Democratic Party clamored for State rights, even though they meant the break-up of the Nation.

FREED THE SLAVES.

Abraham Lincoln, the first Republican president and the arch emancipator of the world, issued the proclamation which freed the 4,000,000 slaves then in bondage in the United States.

HOMESTEADING.

When large stretches of our country yet lay waste and many of our citizens were broken and homeless after the Civil War, a Republican Congress passed the homestead law. This let out Government lands to settlers and aided in building homes and the development of the country.

SOUND MONEY.

The Republican Party saved the country a second time when the free silver peril endangered business ability and our sound financial standing. Our national honor and credit would have been ruined but for the Republican sanity, and we should have been disgraced among the nations of the world. Democrats themselves came to see the fallacy of 16 to 1 after Republican foresight had already averted the calamity.

MANDATORY FOR CUBA.

Seeing Cuba flagrantly misgoverned by Spain, the Republican Government, without awaiting orders from any European league, drove off the oppressor and assumed the mandatory of that suffering little neighbor. With Cuba on her feet, her freedom was established. The same responsibility was accepted for the Philippines.

CURBED THE TRUSTS.

It was a Republican Government, led by that fearless knight Theodore Roosevelt, which had the courage to enforce antitrust laws. These limited the power of immense corporations which were fattening upon the public.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

To assure justice to all in industry, a Republican administration created the Department of Commerce.

LABOR.

Employer's liability laws are due to Republican protection of the laborer. The Labor Bureau is also a Republican creation designed for the same purpose.

It is the tariff, maintained by the Republican Party and opposed by the Democratic Party, which has built up American industries and enabled the American workingman and his family to live in standards of comfort undreamed of by the workers of Europe.

The Republican Party has always been the best friend labor has known. While others have sensationally prated of democracy and love for the workingman, the Republican Party has concerned itself about the building up of business on a foundation so secure that all who labor may be always employed at a profitable wage. Insecurity, uncertainty, and disorder are the greatest enemies the honest, industrious laborer combats; these have never prevailed when the Republican Party was in power.

PANAMA CANAL.

To build the Panama Canal had been the dream of centuries, but it was finally abandoned as impossible. It remained for the Republican Party, under the leadership of the whirlwind of energy, Theodore Roosevelt, to show the world what American enterprise consisted of.

RURAL LIFE SURVEY.

Another of the really great, though less spectacular, accomplishments of Roosevelt's administration was the rural life survey and the interest this directed toward raising the standards of country life.

ENDOWED SCHOOLS.

Naturally the Republican Party led by the greatest scholars America has produced, would devise some means to place education in this country on a solid basis. That was accomplished by endowing the public schools and colleges by revenues from the sale of lands of the public domain.

BUDGET SYSTEM.

President Taft, careful for public funds, felt certain that hundreds of thousands of dollars could be saved to the American people by applying a budget system to Government finance. He first urged a Republican Congress to establish it. The orgy of extravagance and waste which marked the recent period of Democratic control is too fresh in our memories to need comment. The women of America are painfully aware of the fabulous prices paid for camp sites, used and unused; the enormous sums spent on the ridiculous Creel bureau, on supplies not needed and never delivered, and in many other channels needlessly.

Among its early acts, the Republican Congress adopted the budget system idea, and began an instant curtailment of Government expense. There is no doubt that the party which has thus befriended this economy system will bring it to further perfection, to the enormous benefit of the public purse.

AGAINST PATERNALISM.

It has been the policy of the Republican Party to encourage individual effort, investment, and development of business, taking care that all citizens have equal opportunity and that none become so overpowerful as to encroach upon the rights of any. Opposed to this has been the Democratic doctrine of paternalism, with its result of discouraging individual enterprise and initiative. Under paternalism the Government owns and operates the people instead of the people owning and operating the Government. It is a movement away from freedom toward a servitude to Government.

RAILWAY REGULATION.

Under what was practical Government control and ownership of the railroads under recent Democratic control, expenses were enormously increased at the same time the properties were permitted to deteriorate, and the service to the public became more expensive and more inefficient, until a threatened breakdown of our transportation system became imminent. The Republican Party worked out a law known as the Cummins-Esch bill that met the difficult situation in the best possible manner it could be met at that time. Under provisions rates have been reduced from time to time, and our transportation system so vital for the welfare of all our people is saved from a complete wreck.

CONSERVATION.

It is to Republican forethought that we owe our conservation policy. This withdraws from land grants such parts of the public domain as should be kept for all time for the good of all people and not parceled out to become the possession of a few.

By the conservation policy thousands of acres of forests, natural beauty spots, park lands, coal, oil, and gas fields, and water-power sites are reserved for the Government, and instead of creating fabulous fortunes for a few, the profits from these natural resources will hereafter go into the public purse for the further development of our country.

THE MAIL.

Republican institutions are also the Railway Mail Service, the postal savings bank, the parcel post, rural free delivery, and free city delivery.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is of Republican origin. It arbitrates rates for the railways and thus protects the public against unjust discrimination.

FOOD.

Pure food laws, Federal meat inspection, honest labels, and many similar provisions are the result of Republican activity. Women, in their especial province of housekeeping, know that they can depend upon the Republican Party to enact such laws as occasion demands. Under a Republican administration we shall have coal to bake the children's bread and sugar to spread upon it.

PROTECTING THE CHILDREN.

The Children's Bureau was founded by a Republican administration under Taft. Republican leaders have ever given thoughtful care to the needs of little children. In one of his last addresses Roosevelt urged attention to the recently discovered undernourishment too prevalent among American children.

Opposition to Federal child labor laws has always been centered in Democratic strongholds. Those States which have the best child labor laws are Republican States. The same is true of those States which have the most advanced humanitarian laws in general, the best laws safeguarding the morals of young girls and establishing the highest "age of consent."

THE MERIT SYSTEM.

Both great political parties have been guilty of practicing the spoils system—but not equally guilty.

It was Thomas Jefferson, the first great Democrat, who was the author of that famous excuse, "Few die and none resign." For this reason he began the removal of officeholders from office without regard to their ability or faithfulness. In their places he put supporters of the Democratic Party. What Jefferson practiced moderately flared out shamelessly under Jackson, the second great Democrat.

In peace this is less dangerous than in war. In critical times the most capable men to be found should be put and kept in office regardless of political faith. Lincoln had a war Cabinet composed of three Democrats and five Republicans. Wilson refused to appoint a single Republican to his Cabinet during the great World War. Mothers whose sons paid the price of a victory won at such cost of partisanship find it hard to forgive Democratic methods. They can not help but wonder how many American graves in France are due to wholly inappropriate, inexperienced, and incapable men in high office controlling military affairs—how many are due to our tardy preparations and to our woefully inefficient conduct of the war.

For 20 years the Republican Party had been building up a merit system only to have it all broken down during the last 7 years of Democratic administration.

FOREIGN SERVICE.

In no department is it more important that men trained by long service should be retained in office than in the foreign relations department. Diplomacy in many foreign countries is so shrewd and intriguing that a novice, no matter how ardent a partisan, is utterly unable to cope with it and to serve adequately this great and dignified country.

Taft kept our foreign service untouched by partisanship. Our country in Republican days commanded due respect in international councils.

At that most delicate period immediately before the war the spoils system, under Democratic auspices, filled our foreign service with new and inexperienced ambassadors at the various courts of the world.

THE TEST OF WAR.

Nothing shows up more distinctly the difference between the two great parties than their respective services in the late World War and in the cause of peace.

Republican foresight knew it would be impossible for the United States to keep out of the war and accordingly urged preparation. It won thereby the ingratitude of the unthinking and the pain of seeing a Democrat President reelected to office on the delusive slogan "He kept us out of war."

Even after war had been declared, in April, 1917, war preparations lagged and blunder followed blunder. Important offices were filled with inexperienced men—Democrats whom the President insisted on retaining because of personal or party loyalty, utterly disregarding the efficient service needed by the country in its time of danger.

It was then that the patriotic Republican Party rose sublimely above partisanship and stood by the administration in the prosecution of the war more loyally than the leaders of the President's own party.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO PEACE.

Even more valuable than its war work is the contribution which the Republican Party has made toward the cause of world peace. This extends over many years.

One phase of its peace work is a long line of measures leading to arbitration. Carefully the beginnings of international law were being fostered under such respected diplomatists as Hay and Root. Roosevelt was a leader in the movement for a Hague tribunal. When the Russian-Japanese War threatened to spread around the world it was he who used his wonderful influence and brought it to an end.

That other factor in the preservation of peace, "the big stick," was not overlooked during Republican control. The Navy was at its highest efficiency during recent Republican administrations.

The Republican triumph of a completed Panama Canal is an inestimable peace contribution, as are also our great coast-to-coast railways. Our roads, inventions, manufactures, and business prosperity contribute to the cause of peace by making our country powerful and commanding the respect of foreign nations.

But the greatest contribution any party made to the cause of peace was the refusal by Republicans to go into a world league that would bind American wealth and our American sons to wage war in Europe over the petty quarrels engendered there in which we have no direct concern. This protection of Americanism is made complete by the Disarmament Conference called by President Harding and presided over by Secretary of State Hughes. Here the great nations of the earth wrote treaties to discontinue the folly of building armies and navies, to scrap a lot of the war material on hand, and when peace was threatened in the future to meet together and try and settle all difficulties with justice rather than by force of arms.

A third time the Republican Party has saved the Nation. First, during the Civil War, when State rights threatened to disrupt the Union; a second time when the overthrow of our sound currency would have shamed us before the world as a nation whose credit was gone; and now again by asserting our independence as an American nation, that refuses to surrender one iota of its sovereignty to the kings and princes of European and Asiatic countries.

Had it performed no other service for the country, these accomplishments alone would have deserved for the Republican Party the everlasting gratitude of every man, woman, and child in America. But it has much in addition to that to its credit in the very recent past.

After eight years of disastrous experience with a Democratic administration marked by wasteful expenditures, by Government meddling in private business, by socialistic experiments, by favoritism and inefficiency the voters of the Nation by a majority of 17,000,000 placed affairs in the hands of the Republican Party under the leadership of Warren G. Harding.

The results are noticeable. When the Republicans assumed control business was at a standstill, our transportation system was wrecked, our farmers were bankrupt, our laborers were unemployed, housewives were finding the cost of living unreasonably high, Government expenses and taxes were at new high marks, and Government securities—Liberty bonds—were selling at less than 85 cents on the $1, our returned disabled soldiers were clamoring in vain for the hospitalization and care they needed but could not secure, foreign nations were flooding our shores with cheap farm and manufactured products to the ruination of our home producers, we were nominally at war, and distrusted by all the other nations of the earth.

What has been accomplished in a few months of Republican administration?

Two million idle men have been put to work.

Government expenses have been reduced and taxes reduced almost a billion dollars a year.

Farm prices have been stabilized, so that farmers no longer face bankruptcy.

Business and manufacturing have revived.

Living costs are reduced.

Railroad rates are reduced.

Disabled veterans are cared for through a reorganization and coordinating of all the several veteran agencies.

Liberty bonds are at par.

We are at peace with the world and loved and respected by other nations.

WHAT WOMEN WANT.

What women want from their Government is the same as what men want. Both desire, above all, the welfare of America. We are not a household divided against itself. What affects man affects woman, be it a sound financial prosperity, child welfare, industrial unrest, foreign entanglements, or a shortage of coal.

Minor differences of temperament and training between the sexes are fast being lost sight of in the big needs of patriotism. Men and women love their country equally, and the chief concern of each is the best possible Government for this the best Nation on earth.

THE HOPE OF THE FUTURE.

Great and numerous problems confront America to-day; great and numerous opportunities will, under wise statesmanship, open up to her citizens. A glorious future hangs in the balance. The women of America, as they consider our splendid Republican history and our lamentable Democratic past, are wishing for a continuance of Republican efficiency to usher in the great postwar day.

The Republican Party is the party of straight, clean statesmanship; of leaders honorable in private as well as in public life. It is the party of sincerity of effort in public welfare, of brotherly love and humane purposes, of broadmindedness and far vision, of loyal patriotism, and of zeal for Americanism.

It is the party which believes that America, as the first and strongest Republic in the world, has a mission among the nations. In order to wield its rightful influence and assume this expected leadership, it is the firm opinion of Republican statesmen that America must guard well her own integrity and keep herself strong and free.

The Republican Party is the party of all the people—not sectional, not overbalanced by any class, faction, sect, or sex; conservative enough to be deliberate and progressive enough to move forward.

It is the party of experience, having inaugurated most of our great business adjustments and welfare movements for the past 62 years.

With serious earnestness our Republican Congress is tackling its stupendous task of reconstruction. Women feel that all will now be well with America. The party of their confidence is coming again into its own.

Women appreciate the frank and dignified welcome they are receiving into the magnificent Republican Party—as fellow citizens, copartners, and voters, regardless of sex. The womanhood of America heeds the call to patriotism and to public service and is appealed to by the methods and aims of the Republican Party.

We are coming—we are coming, many millions strong—to join forces with the great Republican Party, the benefactor of the past, the stabilizer of the present, and the hope of the future.

OF
HON. FRANK CROWTHER,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 3, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8990) to amend paragraph 440, section 5211, act of June 3, 1864.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we have just voted for the extension of the War Finance Corporation for the period of one year. I voted in favor of the proposition and believe such legislation is necessary for the relief of the farmers and stockmen. We were called upon in November, 1921, to extend the emergency tariff act until February of this year. It passed the House in that form and the Senate sent it back to us with an amendment providing for an indeterminate date. Those of us who are real protectionists were in favor of an emergency tariff bill and we desired to play the protective tariff game squarely with the agriculturist, feeling that he was as much entitled to protection as we of the industrial centers. But we surely threw discretion to the winds when we allowed that bill to continue in force until otherwise provided by law. I objected very seriously to it, but my good Brother FORDNEY patted me on the back and told me it would be only a short time before we would have a real protective tariff bill, a permanent bill.

But it has been a long time since then, longer than the period between libations that the Southern governors referred to in the heyday of the mint julep, and still we have no permanent tariff bill. In Washington and all over the country the importers, international bankers, and free traders have set up an insidious propaganda against a protective tariff. The United States Chamber of Commerce met here a week or ten days ago. That is a great representative institution. If you will look over the subject matter of all the speeches which were delivered at that convention you will find that there was not one address made that had any relation to the benefits to be derived from a protective tariff. Instead of that, the United States Chamber of Commerce members had to sit and listen to a thinly veiled attack on protection by Mr. Balfour of the British Commerce Association—not the Mr. Balfour who was here during the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, but another gentleman of that same name—and he suggested that perhaps England had made a mistake in enacting her recent tariff legislation, which set at naught all the old free-trade principles of Cobden and Bright and put a high protective tariff on some 7,000 articles, that act being known as the British Industries Saving Act, and it imposed a tariff of 33⅓ per cent, and on home valuation. Many of the great metropolitan dailies and some of the big newspapers throughout the country, from the tone of their editorials, the subject matter of which is tariff criticism, would seem to have sold their editorial policy for the price of their advertising columns. In the days of Pulitzer on the World and Greeley on the Tribune and the old standard newspapers you could not buy the editorial policy of a newspaper for all the money you could wheel in at the front door. But it is different nowadays. I wonder if the newspapers of this country are afraid of one legislative body in this Congress, or is that body afraid of the newspapers?

Mr. WINGO. Both.

Mr. CROWTHER. As a matter of fact, the delay in the passage of the tariff bill is being condoned by these newspapers. They are constantly referring to the delay by Congress, but never give the House of Representatives any credit for having lived up to the preelection promises and passing the Fordney tariff bill on July 21, 1921.

"America first" was the slogan in this administration, and we need the support of every real American in keeping the wheels turning in all our industrial plants. We need folks who are anxious to see printed on the goods they buy "Made in the United States of America." Those in charge of the big department stores in this and every other city are cautioned to present to customers first the French, the Saxony, and the English or other goods before they present anything made in America. I especially urge the women of this country to remember their sisters who toil and spin fabrics of silk and cotton and wool and whenever possible buy the products of American labor. [Applause.]

time to time to speak with authority upon tariff matters may be measured by the fact that this writer of the leading editorial of May 22 reaches the remarkable conclusion that no matter what the gold value of the franc, it would always take the same number of francs to purchase a dozen pairs of gloves—the same number when francs are worth 9 cents in gold as when francs are worth 19 cents in gold.

As though he had not yet sufficiently proved his ignorance, the writer gives specific proof of this when he says a little further on:

* * * We see that the woman's glove costing 150 francs a dozen in Paris means, at a 9-cent franc, $13.50. * * * But when the franc gets up to 12 cents in American exchange value the gloves at 150 francs in Paris will cost $18. * * * When the franc gets back to normal, 19.3 cents, the Paris cost will be $28.95. * * *

Groping around in a mental fog, this writer does not seem to have any comprehension of the fact that goods are sold upon their gold value; that $13.50 is very evidently the gold value of the gloves to which he has reference; and that the gold value is in no way affected by the ascendancy of the depreciated franc toward, or to, its par value, although ultimately there will be a complete adjustment of whatever "lag" by which wages have not risen in pace with the decline of the currency, and have therefore reduced the gold cost of manufactured products. Obviously, if $13.50 represents the real, or gold, value of the gloves, that price will remain about as it is now, and as the franc appreciates in value a reduced number of francs will be necessary to purchase the gloves—not the same number of francs, which would more than double the gold price.

There was a time when the New York Herald was more jealous of its repute for mental honesty and ordinary intelligence.

Now, I want to call to the attention of my Democratic friends a resolution passed by the Texas Bankers' Association at Fort Worth, May 19, 1922. The situation has changed in the South. The principle of protection has appealed to the business men of that section, and while it may not add numerically to the Republican membership of the House, still some of you men on that side will find opposition in the primary and the Democrat will win who stands for protection rather than free trade or a tariff for revenue only. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolution passed by Texas Bankers' Association in convention at Fort Worth, Tex., May 19, 1922.

Whereas the value of all securities of Texas banks, the price of every farm product, and the prosperity of the entire South is affected by the tariff measure now pending before Congress; and

Whereas the tariff policy of the present Congress was settled at the polls in November, 1920, and we are going to have a protective tariff on the products of all other sections of the country, regardless of our political convictions on the subject: Therefore be it

Resolved, That so long as the articles of manufacture are protected from foreign competition, that we insist on a protective tariff on vegetable oils, peanuts, live stock, meats, hides, wool—

grain, poultry, and dairy products, and all agricultural, pastoral, and mineral products that will equalize the difference in cost of production between this and foreign countries, and urge our Senators and Congressmen to support the schedules demanded by the various organizations authorized to represent southern industries, as submitted through the Southern Tariff Association to the Senate tariff bloc and approved by them.

Now, they have set aside a day for tariff in Texas. I have here a Fort Worth paper containing a resolution asking that Saturday, June 10, be set aside as tariff day, and that mass meetings be held in all centers of population in the State to secure an intelligent expression from the people, to determine whether or not certain raw materials should be given the same protection extended manufactured articles in the tariff bill now pending in Congress. This resolution was unanimously adopted at the final session of the Southern Tariff Association held in Texas Tuesday.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman tell us whether he is in favor of putting a duty on the skins that the gloves are made of?

Mr. CROWTHER. We have to pay the duty on the wool, and we do not want to pay on the skin and the wool too.

Mr. GARNER. Would the gentleman vote for a protective duty on skins?

Mr. CROWTHER. Does the gentleman from Texas feel the need of such protection in his section of the country?

Mr. GARNER. I ask the gentleman if he would favor a duty on skins?

Mr. CROWTHER. I might be tempted to if the gentleman from Texas would vote for the tariff bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the gentleman say he is in favor of protecting the skins out of which he makes the gloves?

Mr. CROWTHER. Well, I might give it serious consideration if a sufficient compensatory duty was allowed on gloves. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

The late Hon. Henry D. Flood, of Virginia.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS
OF
HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP,
OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Sunday, May 28, 1922.

The House had under consideration House Resolution 350, relating to the life, character, and public services of Hon. H. D. FLOOD, late a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of profound sorrow that I rise to pay a few words of tribute to our departed colleague. His death came so suddenly that it is still difficult for me to realize that he will be with us no more. He was so strong, so virile that one felt his life would have been vouchsafed to us for many years to come. It is beautiful to have these exercises.

While death is the end of all mankind, yet when the grim reaper issues his summons we can not be philosophical. We give way to the feelings of sorrow we have.

The death of Mr. FLOOD is a loss in every sense in which that word can be used. A young and growing family needed the counsel and advice of a father. The home circle can never be complete without the father and the husband. In the great activities of life, in politics, in business, in law, in Congress he will be missed as one who was doing his part in life and doing it worthily. It will be difficult to fill his place.

I regarded him as my good friend. While we have differed in politics, yet in all the years I have known him there was between us the best of good feeling, of good respect, and good friendship.

He represented here in Congress one of the great constituencies, not only of Virginia but of the United States. It is a proud privilege to represent any district in Congress, but especially so a district of the pure Anglo-Saxon race that dominates that section of the State.

The tenth congressional district of Virginia has a political history almost romantic. It has been represented by a Republican in Congress, one of the ablest men our State has produced, Hon. Jacob Yost, of Staunton. It was represented at one time by John Randolph Tucker after Marshall, Virginia's great constitutional lawyer, and later by his no less distinguished son, the present incumbent, Hon. HARRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER. Both these influences Mr. FLOOD successfully combated, and he retained the regard of his people to the day of his death. His is the story of successful progressive development. He did not plunge into fame overnight; he did not flash across the sky in some meteoric appeal; but calmly, fearlessly, he walked along life's pathway, gradually growing in power and in wisdom. His life was essentially political. He loved politics and he loved open combats. He would never refuse a joint discussion, but invited them. The hour could not be too dark when his party could not find in him a ready, able, and devoted champion. The Democratic Party in our State never had a leader or a member who loved it with more single-hearted devotion than did HAL FLOOD, as his friends affectionately termed him. I have thought that his greatest enjoyments came when in his party convention he was fighting for a friend or preparing some policy of his party. No one who heard him can forget the scene in Baltimore in 1912 when he electrified the great convention by his thrilling and brilliant defense of a friend. He could never sit idly by and see a friend suffer. Once he accepted you as such, he gave unreservedly his confidence, his counsel, and his comradeship. He declined a seat tendered him in the United States Senate to serve a friend, and he did it unostentatiously.

I attributed the great success he achieved to those qualities that make for success in every political life—loyalty to friends, courage of convictions, power of organization, and ability on the stump. Those qualities Mr. FLOOD possessed to a high degree. Had he lived longer, and he really passed away in his youth, it would have been to do greater service and accept greater honors. It may have been that death was stealing on him unawares, but his intimates say that it was brought about by unusual exertions in the State compaign of 1921. Following the frequent changes in political control, characteristic of our national life, the Republican Party came into power in 1920, registering an unprecedented victory. It was of such dimensions that its followers were stimulated in every State, and particularly so in our own State of Virginia. A challenge was issued to State democracy. This aroused all the fire and energy and the spirit of this inspired leader. The chairman of the National Democratic Congressional Committee, member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, and Congress still in session, he accepted the less conspicuous position of chairman of the Democratic State committee and proceeded to the management of this campaign, which was to be his last. He made the opening address of the campaign, he organized his forces as they had not been organized before; he went everywhere; if there was a weak spot anywhere, if a county was about to be shaken from its moorings, there was FLOOD in their midst, in the sweltering sun or burning the midnight candle, enjoining democracy to stand firm, and they heeded his call. He overtaxed his strength and was suddenly taken from our midst.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

So it can be said of Mr. FLOOD; he gave his talents, his energy, his life, his all to his party, and he did it because he loved it, Mr. Speaker. I mourn his loss, I respect his achievements, I hallow his memory.

Present Economic Conditions as Affecting American Homes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALICE M. ROBERTSON,
OF OKLAHOMA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 10, 1922.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, many years ago an unexpected call came to me to act temporarily as stenographer for a commission sent to make a treaty with the Cherokee Nation for the cession to the United States of a part of their landed domain. At that time I was a missionary teacher in charge of a school for Indian girls at Muskogee, Indian Territory. The work of the commission to whose assistance I went was very important because of the question of title to a large landed domain not open to either Indian or white settlement. The commission took a house at Tahlequah, and in the intervals of councils with the commissioners for the Cherokees we were left upon our own resources for entertainment. Our little force used to gather before a big log fire and beg the chairman of our commission to relate his experiences. That was before the days of the ambassadors; but he had been consul general and minister to several courts, including England, France, and Spain. Studies of labor conditions and questions of American protection and foreign free trade had been a passion with him. He was a major general, whose empty coat sleeve and bronze button bore witness. He told reluctantly of battles, as brave fighters always do. It was in speaking of the battles of the sixties he told us of foreign conditions.

AMERICA'S LASTING PROSPERITY LAY IN PROTECTION.

Southern born and southern bred as I was, it was from his lips I first heard the declaration that protective tariff was behind the conquering North, while free trade handicapped the gallant, intrepid men of the South. From him I first learned that America's battles, America's victory, America's lasting freedom and prosperity lay in protection. He was insistent that America's greatest warfare was to be for her homes, to keep her people above the horrors of foreign free-trade laborers. From that time free trade and protection have been my constant study, not from the standpoint of a lawmaker but of a plain American woman. Later, as my little school, with the development of the Indian community into a great State, grew into a coeducational college in which I taught civics, this question received even more intense study.

THE RENAISSANCE OF PROTECTION—THE FATALITY OF FREE TRADE.

Solomon said, "There is no new thing under the sun," and from the times of Alexander Hamilton to FORDNEY and McCUMBER tariff has been covered in its every phase. To recite the history and the results is unnecessary, nor is it necessary to make any arguments on the beneficence of protection or the fatality of free trade, and to enter into a discussion of schedules and rates would burden you and me unnecessarily. After the many months in which I have watched, sometimes present at hearings of the Ways and Means Committee, where the interests of my own constituents were most vitally interested, I am ready to accept and vote for the pending bill. I am satisfied that it will be helpful to the country. Protection! Could there be a word meaning more to woman since the days of the cave man, when her master sheltered her frailer form with his brute strength? The instinct of woman has always been to accept the strong care of man, and so protection has stood for safety to the family, to the home, to the Nation. The idea beginning so long ago has shaped itself into police and fire and health departments; into laws for women and children; for health; for control of factories and safety for workmen; into life insurance and fire and casualty insurance. In our homes, in our journeys, in work or recreation, always the protection of life governs us. This leads into protection not alone of the life of the individual but of the opportunities for physical comfort and happiness of the masses.

THE FIRST DUTY IS TO TAKE CARE OF OUR OWN.

We have all smiled often at the picture of Mrs. Jellaby diligently sewing red flannels for Africa while her own children were dirty and ragged in the back yard. I refused to go as a missionary to India when my duty, I felt, was absolutely at home with the American Indians, whom I knew and loved. To me the first duty is to take care of our own American people before we reach beyond our immediate environment. This does not mean America should be a hermit nation—far from it—but America should not emulate the slumbering foolish virgins.

NO ARGUMENT FAVORING FREE TRADE THAT HAS NOT BEEN COMPLETELY DEMOLISHED.

This thought came to me with great force upon the recent visit to America of that gracious and beautiful daughter of Virginia, the distinguished member of the British Commons, Nancy Langhorne Astor, who, in discussing comparative questions of British and American interests, spoke of herself as being 50 per cent American and 50 per cent British. This seemed to me hardly fair. She should be 100 per cent British if a member of their governing body, so I, 100 per cent American, can not take her fifty-fifty. Really, however, I do not think she is fifty-fifty British and American, because her viewpoint is so distinctly for the interests of England and not America that she is 100 per cent British. And so we come to the methods of protection and free trade. There is no argument I have ever found favoring free trade that has not been completely demolished in consideration. If we had before us a health chart of American prosperity, such a chart as is made for hospital patients, and you could follow with me the up and down wavering line of depression and prosperity, it would startle you to see how this line has followed a protective tariff. There have been, however, those exceptions which prove the rule. Two free-trade tariffs, those of 1846 and 1913, did not at once show the inevitable disaster, because of war and its inflation of values, but the depression was only delayed, and of the last one we, as a country, now know the results. There is in the heart of woman, especially the woman who has had the concealed duty, always, of caring for the family and expending the support provided by man, the protector, a keen interest in making the most of what comes to her. It has been as great a delight to her to plan, as to man is the conquering of nature's resources. I do not like to say that the desire to get something for nothing is a strong feminine trait, but to get as much as possible for as little as possible is almost universal with womankind. I have known women to use an hour of time and energy they could ill spare to go to a bargain sale where they might perhaps get a paper of pins for 2 cents less than the ordinary price. One dollar and ninety-eight cents, instead of two dollars, sounds wonderfully seductive, and free trade appeals most to those with whom this often blind, unreasoning bargain desire is predominant. We do not stop to consider cause and effect, what the balance will be, and whether seeming economy is not grossest extravagance.

DUTY IS PAID BY THE FOREIGN SELLER OR IMPORTER.

And just here, to bring the meaning of the words before those who do not hear but read this speech, a tariff is an import duty or tax laid on articles or lists of articles entering our country from a foreign country. The duty may be ad valorem—according to value; that is, a certain percentage of the value of the article or articles—or specific—that is, so much per pound or yard or gallon or dozen, and so forth. This duty or tax is paid by the foreign seller or importer or agent, and such revenue is paid into the United States Treasury.

A duty imposed on competitive goods—such as we ourselves can and do produce—to equalize the cost of production here and abroad and to prevent our being at the mercy of foreign producers is known as a protective tariff, while a duty on commodities which we do not produce or do not produce in sufficient quantities for our use—as coffee, tea, silk, and so forth—is called a revenue tariff. The Democratic free-trade contention is that a low tariff which admits foreign goods freely is a revenue tariff, although it has been our experience that such a tariff does not give us as much revenue as does a protective tariff.

PRACTICAL FREE TRADE.

With no tariff whatever we should have absolute free trade. But the term "free trade" should also be applied to the operation of a tariff so low as not to prevent the unchecked importations of competitive products. If, for instance, a duty of 20 per cent or 20 cents is necessary to equalize the cost of production here and abroad, a duty of 19 per cent or 19 cents results in practical free trade.

To be protective a duty must give us at least an equal chance in our own markets with the foreign producer or importer.

Tariff protection, therefore, gives us just what the term implies and is a synonym of patriotism.

There is a phase of protection that I have never seen fully elucidated, at least not by a woman. I think I am within the truth when I say that there is nothing in a woman's life quite like shopping. Men do not know how fascinating it is. Marketing may be a drudge, but shopping is a delight. The great department stores in our large cities are the most seductive places on earth. First, there is the appeal of advertisements of about everything in about every store "below cost." The men or women employed in reducing prices are unceasingly busy. And how we women fall for these "bargains." We do not stop to consider that if there are actual "reductions" and "below cost" sales there must be some tremendous profits to more than balance them, because of the millions and millions of capital invested in these stores and the other millions spent in advertising and like endless expenses.

I am not "knocking" these splendid shopping centers. They are wonderful institutions with owners who are very human who are in business for the purpose of making money. Competition is keen and unceasing; invention of methods and devices must be employed to gain and hold trade. Customers, too, are human and we all love a bargain. But do sellers and buyers always use a common-sense realization of conditions and results? I am afraid not. I am afraid neither look much further than immediate profits to sellers and savings to buyers.

IMPORTED GOODS PROMINENTLY ADVERTISED.

We are told that the imported goods, so prominently advertised and displayed, form but a small percentage of the total goods sold. Of course percentages vary, but the aggregate year in and year out must be enormous and never perhaps so great as now. It would be useless to attempt to reproduce their daily advertisements, but I will present one of recent date taken from a New York paper. It reads as follows:

[From the New York Tribune, June 2, 1922.]

COTTON DRESS FABRICS IN AMAZING ARRAY.

The dress goods salon is now showing the most interesting and comprehensive collection of cotton dress fabrics in New York both from the point of view of fashion and of price.

FROM FRANCE.

Rodier's wonderful embroidered linens and batistes which started the vogue of all-over embroideries in striking designs.
Embroidered voiles of exquisite textures and colorings.
Organdies which Paris is using for dance and garden party frocks.
Eponges in striking plaids and checks, some from Rodier, many exclusive with us; filet weaves, and the plain in an unlimited choice of colorings.
The new cote de cheval and other pique weaves in stripes and crossbars.

FROM SWITZERLAND.

Organdies with the permanent finish which St. Gall has made famous in dotted, crossbar, and plain weaves.

FROM IRELAND.

Linens in handkerchief and dress weaves with stripes or dots and in the solid colors.
Dimities in delightful patterns.

FROM SCOTLAND.

D. and T. Anderson's ginghams, of course, and madras shirtings.

FROM JAPAN.

Crêpe in plain and checked weaves.

FROM AMERICA.

The prints, voiles, tissues, ginghams, and chambrays, and other smart fabrics.

FROM ENGLAND.

English sateens and prints in quaint designs, ginghams, and voiles.
An important sale of 25,000 yards carefully selected fabrics at exceptionally low prices.

St. Gall dotted Swiss, 85 cents; regular $1.25.
Woven dots in white and color on contrasting backgrounds.
Imported dress linen, 58 cents; regular $1.
The noncrushable canvas weave in a large choice of color and white; thoroughly cold-water shrunk; 36 inches wide.
Zephyr dress gingham, 48 cents; regular 65 cents.
Soft finish, in many distinctive designs; checks, plaids, stripes, and plain colors; 31 inches wide.
Imported organdie, 65 cents; regular $1.
The new pastel colorings and white 44 inches wide.
Dress goods salons, first floor, old building.

IMPORTED GOODS DEPRIVE OUR WORKING MEN AND WOMEN OF WAGES.

Imported dress fabrics at almost half the regular price! What woman could resist? It is not a question of lack of patriotism or loyalty, for we do not think of that phase of it. We do not stop to consider that every dollar's worth, every hundred dollars' worth, every thousand dollars' worth, every million dollars' worth of imported goods that are bought displaces just that amount of American goods and deprives our working men and women of just so much wages. Combine the words "imported" and "reduced" and the "bargain" becomes irresistible.

ARE THEY REALLY BARGAINS?

But are they really bargains? Why, we are told that the profits on imported wares run from 100 to 2,000 per cent. Articles that cost 25 cents abroad sell for $5 in our stores here. A watch worth 60 cents abroad is sold for $25 here. A razor which cost only 3 cents is sold for $3, and so all through an almost innumerable list, from articles costing cents to those costing hundreds and thousands of dollars. The thoughtless woman who buys the imported hose or gloves or dress pattern little realizes that she may be contributing toward her husband's or son's or daughter's idleness. And so with all of us. We do not know. We do not realize what the continued buying of foreign-made goods may mean. We do not lack patriotism, but we are thoughtless or without intelligent appreciation of the harm we are doing.

PROTECTIVE TARIFF INSURES AGAINST IDLENESS.

And so we must be protected against our own acts; just as our pure food and drug act protects us against poisons or unwholesome food, just as insurance protects us against our own carelessness. And, mind you, a protective tariff is a national safeguard. It directly and indirectly protects us all, every man, woman, and child in every State of the Union. It promotes opportunity, it safeguards every occupation, it insures us against idleness.

Nor do we ask for a wall that keeps out all foreign products. We shall go on importing millions and hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of foreign products just as we have been doing for over a century. We shall buy what we want to buy of both competitive and noncompetitive wares, and we shall sell what foreigners want to buy of our productions. But with an adequately protective tariff we shall not be at the mercy of foreign producers as we are to-day. And we shall, moreover, be able to make articles as good in quality and as reasonable in price as the foreign goods now dumped in such enormous quantities on our markets. We lose nothing, we gain much. We are all gainers because we are so interdependent. An idle mill in Massachusetts means a lesser sale of the products of Oklahoma, and, as we are all here to represent our several States, I want briefly to plead the cause of my State, which was among the last three to enter the Union.

AN INDUSTRIAL STATE IN THE BROADEST SENSE.

A generation ago we were an undeveloped Indian country with no white ownership of land and no lawful investments for capital; to-day we are a small empire, and we have passed over half the older States in population, wealth, and progress. We are an industrial State in the broadest sense of the word. We glory in our mines, our oil, our agriculture, and our manufacturing. We grow the corn of the North and the cotton of the South, and the value of our manufactures total nearly a half billion dollars annually. Perhaps no State in the Union has such a varied production as ours. For all these varied products and for all the workers on our farms and in our mills we want protection, the protection of a tariff against the products of the cheap labor of foreign countries. Unless you prosper, we can not prosper. Unless we prosper, you will not reap a full measure of prosperity; and so in pleading for protection to the labor and industries of my State, I plead for protection to the labor and industries of your States. We benefit or suffer alike and together. We are a union and are inseparable.

TARIFF A LOCAL QUESTION WITH NATIONAL EFFECT.

Truly, as General Hancock said, "The tariff is a local question," but with national demonstration and effect. Wheat grown in Oklahoma, if tariff protected, may be consumed in Massachusetts. Zinc mined in Oklahoma, if tariff protected, may be consumed in California or Florida or Pennsylvania.

Protection benefits every locality and every person. This idea seems to me not a selfish but a glorious idea, an idea that is exemplified in teamwork, whether in warfare, in work, or in play. And if it be right and glorious to die for one's country, it must be right and glorious to live for one's country and work for one's country and plead for one's country, just as we do, and should do, for one's State, one's community, one's family, and one's self.

OKLAHOMA WANTS OPPORTUNITY TO DO HER SHARE.

Oklahoma wants the opportunity to do her share of the Nation's work. I have said that our manufacturing amounts in value to half a billion dollars annually; our agriculture is of even greater importance. We have some 200,000 farms with a value approaching $2,000,000,000. The value of our crops, of course, varies. In 1919 it was $550,000,000. But then the war was over and we were operating under practical free trade and values fell till there was little or no reward for our farmers. It was mighty disheartening to be able to get only 15 to 20 cents a bushel for our corn and corresponding prices for other products. Just what would have happened to our farms and farmers during the years from 1913 to 1921, had it not been for the World War, one does not like to contemplate, nor does one like to feel that even temporary prosperity is dependent upon warfare. We in Oklahoma felt the disastrous effects of the Democratic free-trade tariff of 1913 at once. To save the tenant farmers from actual want, when they could not sell their cotton, the men joined the "buy a bale" movement, and we women pledged ourselves to wear cotton garments—a pledge well kept till war made a market again for cotton. And as soon as the war was over came again the withering blight with disaster we could not avert.

But on March 4, 1921, there came to the White House a protectionist President and to the Capitol a protectionist Congress in both branches, which gave us the emergency tariff of May, 1921, now still in operation, and our farms and farmers were saved from further disaster and absolute ruin.

PROTECTION WILL GIVE PURCHASING POWER.

But we not only want protection for our products, we want protection for our customers, and our customers are scattered over all this broad land. Our wheat and corn may be consumed in New England, our zinc in California or Pennsylvania or Florida, and that will give us the purchasing power with which to buy the products of New York or Illinois or Oregon or any other State of the Union.

Protection under normal conditions would quickly place Oklahoma among the first 10 States in industrial rank. I want to see all Oklahomans prosper. I want to see all Americans prosper, and we must retreat or advance together, and the Republican principle of protection is not sectional. It benefits every class and every community.

NOW IMPORTING DOUBLE.

I have just noticed that our national imports for May amounted in value to $254,000,000, 25 per cent increase over April and 25 per cent more than May a year ago, and this is in face of lower prices. It means perhaps that we are now importing double what we were a year ago and it accounts largely for the unemployed outside of those who are idle because of strikes.

We should not continue to be at the mercy of foreign cheap producers and conscienceless importers who are pocketing enormous profits at the double expense of American labor, for our people are not only losing wages but paying far too much for what they buy. The only remedy is a protective tariff that will check both importations of competitive goods and outrageous profiteering.

A HAPPY HOME WHEN WAGE EARNERS ARE BUSY.

My plea, then, is for the American home, for American women who can only make that home a happy one when the wage earners are busy. My plea is for American youth, with the opportunity for them in acquiring education followed by opportunity for employment at such remuneration as will enable more perfect manhood and womanhood and citizenship as the affairs of the Nation devolve upon them, carrying it to still greater power and glory.

CAN NOT PAY DEBT IF WE EMPLOY OTHERS TO DO OUR WORK.

What a pity to delay this splendid progress! It will take us generations to recover the losses of the war. There is a national debt of over $20,000,000,000 to be paid, and it can only be paid by the wages and profits of production. It is about one-tenth of our national wealth—but it must remain a burden till it is liquidated. We can not pay this debt if we are idle and employ others to do our work for us. That would mean going deeper and deeper into debt, till we become insolvent. Then, indeed, would our American standard of living, American homes, and American spirit all be gone.

DO MORE THAN MERELY EXIST.

I want to see the people of my State and of every other State do more than merely exist. I want to see more and more American homes. Already more than half of our people own their own homes and millions of others are being paid for. I want those payments to increase, and it can only be done by doing our own work. The home is the very foundation of our American institutions, of law and order, of contentment and happiness, of aspirations and ambitions, of moral and physical advancement, of stability and the healthful growth of mind, soul, and body. We can well rejoice in our places of worship, in our splendid schools and colleges, in our legislative halls, in our fields for recreation and our places for work, and though we excel in each and all there is still no place like home, the substantial, comfortable, happy American home. Our song of songs extols this sweetest and most sacred place.

FREE TRADE NOT A HOME BUILDER.

But we can only have it if through work we are prosperous. It is not a product of idleness; it can not come by buying abroad what we should make ourselves. We need protection to enable us to buy our homes; we need protection to enable us to furnish them and maintain them. Free trade is not a home builder. Free trade does not give us carpets and pictures and pleasing furniture and musical instruments.

How eager we all are at the close of the session to get "back home"; how eager are the boys and girls at school and college to get home for vacation; how eager are the weary workingmen and women to get home after the daily toil. Are these loved homes worth working for, worth pleading for, worth voting for? We know they are, and my plea for protection is a plea for the American home—the basis of our American life. My plea is that American men and women shall have opportunity to build and maintain these homes—the basis of our fine manhood and womanhood and childhood.

WORKING WITHOUT SUBSTANTIAL REWARD.

My sister recently went on a cruise through the Mediterranean. She visited many countries and many cities. She saw the men and women of those lands working without substantial reward or aspiration; she saw so much misery and degradation, so much poverty and sorrow that she could not but think every day of the higher standard of living at home, of our opportunities and blessings, of our joys and happiness, and as she told me of her experience her constant thought was the contrast with our States and our homes of comfort and plenty.

There may be a few palaces abroad but the hovels are so many that it makes one joyous indeed to have been born in America, where protection has been a national policy and principle and made our lives to differ from theirs.

PROTECTION THE FIRST LAW OF NATURE.

Why, protection is the very first law of nature. Every bird, every animal protects its young. Even the savage protects his own; why, then, should we not do the same, and by example stimulate others to do likewise? Surely it must be a God-given attribute which it is our plain duty to observe. We are far from perfect as a Nation and as a people. This millenium is far distant, and for a long time to come the wise and strong must care for the ignorant and weak. Our fathers were wise in their day and generation, and built our industrialism on the rock of protection. Whenever we have departed from that principle disaster has followed in greater or less degree. There is no better lesson than experience, and we can do no better than profit by the teachings of the past.

EARLY APPROVAL OF TARIFF ACT THE REMEDY.

In fact, we can profit from the everyday object lessons that now confront us. Ships laden with foreign wares are coming to our ports from all parts of the world. Our markets are flooded with these goods, our newspapers are carrying the advertisements of the sellers who are reaping enormous profits and preventing American labor from being at work. Do we need any clearer lesson than this situation? I can not plead with American merchants not to offer these goods for sale. I can not plead with American shoppers not to buy them. No; there is only one remedy—the early approval of the tariff act now pending.

And now a word as regards revenue. A protective tariff always gives us more revenue than a tariff for revenue. Time was when the revenue from import duties made up about one-third of our total Federal income. Now it is less than one-tenth, but every added million should mean a million decrease in taxation now so burdensome. We not only need this increased revenue, but it is a just fee that foreign producers should pay for the privilege of entering our markets. Our own domestic manufacturers and farmers pay heavily for this privilege. They pay in taxes—Federal taxes, State taxes, and local taxes. They pay in various other ways. Why, then, should not the foreign manufacturers and farmers pay as well for their privilege? There is no element of a protective tariff that is not just and equitable and righteous.

ARE WE READY TO ADOPT LOWER STANDARDS OF LIVING?

If we work freely with the rest of the world, there must be a leveling of standards of living. Are we willing and ready to adopt the lower standards of Europe and Asia? No, I say; a thousand times no. We can not raise them to ours; that would be impossible. The only way to elevate the rest of mankind is to maintain our own high standard and incite their emulation. The strong can help the weak far more by remaining strong than by becoming weak.

A PITY TO CAST AWAY OUR OPPORTUNITY.

Think for a moment what the United States has done for the world and mankind during a century and a quarter of progress, progress under and because of a protective tariff. If we had not become powerful and rich, do you think we could have done what our country and its people did in 1917 and 1918? Our American spirit rallied with our millions of men and our billions of money and the cruel World War came to a sudden end. Without our century and more of protection, which made us so strong, the result might have been—yes, would have been—far different, and our own safety menaced. I shudder to think of it, and I shudder to think of the consequences should we lose out in the coming industrial warfare and be at the mercy of the world. Oh, what a pity to cast away our opportunity, to neglect to fortify ourselves, to keep our markets open till we are dragged down to the lower level. How I wish I could arouse the women of the country to the importance of this question. They now compose about one-half of the voters; they compose more than one-half of the buyers as ultimate consumers.

THE TARIFF PRINCIPLE EASY TO UNDERSTAND.

And the tariff question as an idea and a principle is so easy to understand. Even the making of rates is one of equity and computation. But experts can attend to that, so long as the principle of protection is safe. Most of our women are home makers. We are a Nation of homes. Half our people own their homes, millions of others are making partial payments, and these homes are comfortable and roomy, well furnished, and contribute so much to contentment and ambition.

SPLENDID AMERICAN HOMES DUE TO PROTECTION.

These splendid American homes are due to the American system of protection, due to a tariff principle and practical operation that enables us to do our own work, and not only that but the best kind of work. Protection instills a desire to do our best, to go forward and always excel. This phase of our national life and work was so splendidly elucidated by the late Senator John P. Jones, of Nevada, in his most excellent speech, afterwards printed under the title "Shall the Republic do its own work?" that I could wish every woman and every man in the country had a copy. I do not need to attempt to elaborate this thought. It is so self-evident that we can not prosper if we are idle and employ the labor of other lands to do our work for us. We can not excel if we are idle; we can not go forward; we can not even exist.

A PROTECTIVE TARIFF LAW THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA.

I am so glad I am an American. I am so glad I am a protectionist. I am so glad to be able to go on record in favor of an economic policy that builds and maintains American homes. I shall ever be proud and grateful that I had the privilege of voting for a tariff law—a protective tariff law—to supersede the free trade act now in operation. May the day soon come when that vote can be cast for the conference bill, for that will be the end of free trade and the beginning of a new era. It will, I believe, mark the end of enforced idleness and usher in a period of busy times in industry. That means less poverty and sorrow and discontent; it means less strife and less strikes; for with the constant pay envelope and the adequate income, there will follow a desire for the good things of life, a desire that can be appeased—not longed for in vain.

And, best of all, there will be not only more happiness in the homes we have but innumerable new homes, more firesides, greater peace and joy and contentment.

PROTECTION MEANS SO MUCH.

Let me conclude with other expressions of my love for the word protection. It means so much; it does so much; it insures so much. Protection for our labor and industries. Protection for our institutions and, best of all, protection for our homes. That will bring better citizenship, better men and women and a better Nation—a Nation that in its power and wealth will make a better world and enhance the welfare of all humanity.

Port of New York.

OF

HON. WALTER M. CHANDLER,

OF NEW YORK.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 1, 1922.

The House had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 337) granting the consent of Congress to a compact between the States of New York and New Jersey for unified control and development of the port of New York.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, in recent months it has been my great pleasure and privilege to report from the Judiciary Committee of the House two bills relating to the port of New York.

The first was Senate 745, which had been referred to my committee, and that was intended to determine the legal status of longshoremen. This bill was intended to carry out what the committee believed, after careful consideration, to be a correct solution of the problem of providing compensation for port workers.

Previous to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Jensen against Southern Pacific Co. no difficulty had arisen on this head, and the courts and administrative authorities had acted on the assumption that the State law could grant compensation to these as well as to other workers within the State. The Jensen decision held in the case of a longshoreman employed by a ship, who was injured under circumstances amounting to a maritime tort, that the compulsory compensation law of New York State could not apply. They considered that the cost of providing compensation in all the ports called at by a ship and the differing compensation laws in different States would be a burden on commerce and a substantial interference with the uniformity of maritime law.

That decision in the interest of uniformity for the shipowner overlooked uniformity for the workmen or uniformity for the large class of employers within the State, part of whose work was maritime, while the rest was necessarily covered by the State compensation laws and for whom the uniformity provided for the shipowner meant confusion and lack of uniformity. Since the decision in the Jensen case the courts and the compensation commissions have been confronted with many difficult cases well illustrating the confusion into which the Jensen case had thrown the various trades affected by the decision.

The confusion in all these cases resulted from the varying remedies depending upon the peculiar character of the longshoreman's employment at the moment of injury. If he was working on a dock moving freight from one pile to another the compensation law of the State applied. If he was injured while working on a vessel, moving freight, his remedy was under the maritime law of the United States. If he happened to be injured while working on a gangplank, a kind of twilight zone between sea and land, both his status and his remedy were uncertain. To add to the confusion and annoyance, if the longshoreman happened to be shifting freight that was moving in interstate commerce, he had no remedy under the compensation law of the State of New York but was compelled to apply to the State courts for his remedy under the common law of torts.

The bill that I had the honor to report from the Judiciary Committee of the House on January 31, 1922, will, it is believed, meet the constitutional objection urged in the Jensen case and will provide a uniform remedy under the compensation laws of the States to all the longshoremen of all ports of the country. The absence of such uniform remedy in our judicial system has worked a great hardship upon a most deserving class of workmen, and I am glad that it has been possible for me to be at least partially instrumental in righting the wrong.

Mr. Speaker, the case of the longshoremen had to do only with the legal rights of a certain class of workmen at the port of New York. The present bill has to do with the future development of the port itself, and I wish to submit at this time a printed copy of my report for insertion in the RECORD.

[House Report No. 1039, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

DEVELOPMENT AND ADMINISTRATION OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany House Joint Resolution 337:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 337) granting consent of Congress to the comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York as agreed on between the Legislatures of the States of New York and New Jersey, having had the same under consideration, report it to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

This resolution supplements and carries out the purpose of Senate Joint Resolution 88, passed by Congress and approved by the President in August, 1921. In accordance with the agreement of the States of New York and New Jersey, expressed in the compact between them, signed April 30, 1921, the legislatures of the two States have adopted a detailed and comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York, as contemplated in said compact. The acts of the two legislatures adopting such plan are chapter 43, Laws of New York, 1922, and chapter 9, Laws of New Jersey, 1922.

This resolution was first introduced by Mr. ANSORGE as House Joint Resolution 283 and submitted to the Secretary of War, who recommended some amendments thereto. The resolution was then reintroduced by him in somewhat modified form, and with these amendments added no change was made in the effect of the resolution, except to modify it so as to comply with the recommendations of the Secretary of War.

As this resolution only carries out more in detail what was sought to be accomplished by Senate Joint Resolution 88, the reasons for the passage of that resolution apply likewise as reasons for passing this resolution. I submit the following excerpt from the report on that resolution:

"Historically, geographically, and commercially New York and the industrial districts in the northern part of New Jersey constitute a single unit, a great metropolitan district of more than 8,000,000 people. The port of New York, with its three entrances, 800 miles of water front, 12 railroads—exclusive of local transit lines—entering the port, a terminus of nearly all of the more important trans-Atlantic lines not only concern the people of the two States but constitutes an asset of the entire Nation. The necessity of creating the port district and authorizing the creation of the port authority is manifest from the fact that over 40 municipalities are involved, some of them controlled by men of divergent views and many of them working at cross-purposes and in the dark.

"The port of New York is one of the main arteries and principal gateways between the United States and the markets of the world and any improvement to the port of New York will work a benefit to the entire Nation. Concededly the terminal facilities at the port are grossly inadequate, mainly due to the lack of cooperation between the two States of New York and New Jersey. It is submitted that a unified authority and control will bring order out of chaos and afford a blessing not only to the contiguous municipalities but also to the country at large.

Speaking of improvements sought to be authorized by this plan, Hon. John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, among other things, made this statement:

"The adequate improvement and development of port facilities at New York is a deserving enterprise, and if the work is accomplished on the comprehensive plan of cooperation contemplated by the two States it will doubtless result in benefit to the transportation interests of the entire Nation. I recommend, therefore, that Congress give its consent to the agreement."

It is of pressing importance that this resolution be passed in the very near future, so that the work sought to be accomplished under it can be initiated at once. There is very great need for this improvement. A great deal of criticism has been directed against this port because of the difficulty experienced in entering and leaving it. It is believed that if the improvement contemplated under this resolution can be carried out it will be of great service not only to New York City but to the country generally.

Needless to say to you, my colleagues, that the constitutional requirement of the consent of Congress to a compact between two States is to be found in the following language of Article I, section 10, of the Constitution:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into an agreement or compact with another State.

The States of New York and New Jersey entered into an agreement which was signed by them on April 30, 1921. In accordance with the compact so entered into by them the legislatures of the two States have adopted a detailed and comprehensive plan for the development of the port of New York, and now they come asking the consent of Congress under the constitutional provision just mentioned.

There is no reason why this consent should not be given. A unified control under a legally constituted port authority will accrue enormously to the advantage and benefit not only of the States immediately concerned but to the entire Nation as well. New York harbor belongs primarily to the States of New York and New Jersey, but every State in the Union has a direct interest in its development and control. It is the great port of entry for foreign goods destined for every State of the Republic, and through it and from it our manufactured goods and raw material go out to all the world. In other words, more than 50 per cent of the foreign commerce of our country passes through New York Harbor.

In 1914, the year of the beginning of the Great War—that is, the last normal year of foreign commerce—8,400 vessels, with a capacity of 24,000,000 net tons, cleared from the port of New York. In that year 45,000,000 tons of freight, exclusive of that carried in Hudson River and Sound vessels, entered or left the port of New York.

The purpose of the compact between the States of New York and New Jersey is to effect a joint control and to execute an intelligent plan of development and maintenance of the port of New York. Heretofore there seems to have been a complete lack of cooperation between the two States, and the result has been a very costly and damaging confusion, especially in matter of freight shipments, causing a very bad congestion in the matter of the receipt and distribution of foodstuffs in New York City and the surrounding country.

The terminal facilities at the port are not only antequated but are wholly inadequate at the present time to meet the demands of modern commerce. The result is not only a great loss at times to shippers from other States to New York of their perishable products but a great increase in the cost of living to the people of New York City due to insufficient terminal and transportation facilities. It is a distressing fact that it now costs a great deal more to move foodstuffs from the meadows of New Jersey to Brooklyn, Queens, Upper Manhattan, and the Bronx than it does to transport it from Illinois and other mid-western States to the meadows of New Jersey.

An intelligent development of the port of New York under a unified control will completely change these intolerable conditions and will materially lessen the high cost of living by materially decreasing transportation charges.

The detailed plans proposed by this bill provide for simplifying transportation methods by providing bridges, terminals, tunnels, and belt lines which will connect New York City immediately with the great transcontinental railways. In this way congestion in freight shipments and delay in distributing food to the people of New York will be avoided.

The plans submitted further provide for unified terminals within the port and for a consolidation of shipments from certain points. In this way congestion and duplication of work will be elliminated and long truck hauls avoided, with a natural and consequent decrease in the cost of living as a result of cheaper food products.

Mr. Speaker, this compact between the States of New York and New Jersey and the resulting detailed plans for the development of the port of New York have been the results of alternating rivalry and attempts at conciliation and cooperation between the two States extending over several years. At times quite a degree of bitterness has been aroused. Each State has sought on occasion to vindicate its rights by judicial action. New Jersey once sought to secure a differential in its favor against New York, and at another time, in the celebrated harbor-pollution case, New York went so far as to sue New Jersey in the United States Supreme Court. Crimination and recrimination characterized the proceedings, as each State charged the other State with polluting the waters of the harbor. The Supreme Court, playing the rôle of a good mother between two naughty children, advised both States to get together some way and agree upon an intelligent plan for the solution of the harbor-pollution difficulty. The same advice seems to have been given in the rate case by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The result has been this compact between the States of New York and New Jersey.

However, no agreement was reached until the matter had been submitted to a referendum of the peoples of the two States through party platforms at a general election.

The Republican Party at its unofficial convention held at Saratoga on July 28, 1920, inserted the following plank in its platform of principles:

A progressive plan of future improvement of harbor facilities must be adopted in cooperation with the State of New Jersey.

We therefore favor a compact or agreement with our sister State which will provide for the creation of a port district and a port authority with adequate powers to develop this port comprehensively.

Similarly the Democratic Party, at its unofficial convention held at Saratoga Springs on August 4, 1920, declared in its party platform as follows:

We owe it to the Nation to organize and develop the port of New York. To that end we favor a compact or agreement with our sister State, New Jersey, which shall provide for the creation of a port district and a port authority with adequate powers to develop the port comprehensively, and with proper protection for New York City over the public ownership and development of its water front and commercial facilities.

It may be added that both political parties in New Jersey made similar platform declarations. And to illustrate further the nonpartisan character of the whole matter, I need only mention that the Republican Governor of New York, Hon. Nathan Miller, has appointed the former Democratic Governor of New York, Hon. Alfred E. Smith, one of the members of the port authority to represent New York.

It will thus be seen, Mr. Speaker, that this compact has not only the sanction of the sovereign people of two great States, expressed at the ballot box and through their representatives in legislative assemblies, but it has also been tacitly approved in the advice given by two great Federal agencies—the Supreme Court of the United States and the Interstate Commerce Commission. Since the Constitution permits such an agreement, what serious objection, then, can be made to its ratification by an act of Congress? I submit that there is none.

The bill has been so skillfully drawn that the relative rights of municipalities, of States, and of the Nation are all duly protected. It is especially stipulated in the agreement that property belonging to any city or municipality can not be taken without the consent of that city or municipality. The sovereign political as well as the property rights of the States of both New Jersey and New York are rigidly safeguarded, and the resolution itself provides that nothing contained in it shall be construed as impairing or destroying any right or jurisdiction of the Federal Government over the territory or subject matter which forms the basis of the compact.

Several features of the bill were suggested by Secretary of War Weeks as a proper protection to the Federal Government, and provisions embodying these suggestions were incorporated in the bill. The chief of these provisions may be found on page 13, and runs as follows:

No bridges, tunnels, or other structures shall be built across, under, or in any waters of the United States, and no change shall be made in the navigable capacity or conditions of any such waters until the plans therefor have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite natural that I and every other New York Representative should very keenly desire the passage of this resolution. It is a forward step in the direction of the solution of a vexed problem of several years standing. Its direct result will be the beginning of the development of the port of New York in a manner that can bring only good to the people of the great city that have honored us with their suffrage and have commissioned us to represent them here. But the interest in this project should not be confined to the New York representation in Congress. New York City, it must be remembered, is not local but national and international. It belongs primarily to the people of New York State; secondarily, to the people of our common country; and, in a more remote degree, to the people of all the earth.

New York City is certainly the metropolis of America, and probably of the whole world. If a 19-mile radius be applied to greater New York, as the same is applied to greater London, the population of New York City would be 7,600,000, or nearly a half million more than London.

In its march of thousands of years the race has encircled the globe and entered this its last promised land, containing every condition of national greatness, prosperity, and perpetuity. Every tribe of earth has made to our national population its contribution of men, women, and children, and New York City has been the gateway through which the people of other lands have come to mingle and dwell with us. In passing through the gateway many hundreds of thousands have lingered for a while and have then stopped to make their permanent abode.

Every State and every Territory of the American Union has made its substantial contribution to the citizenship of New York City. From Maine and Minnesota, from California and Texas, from Florida and Virginia, and, indeed, from everywhere within our borders, from every State of the great Republic, the best and bravest have gone to the greatest of all cities to live and dwell and die.

These considerations, my colleagues, should move you to an immediate passage of this resolution, for whatever benefits the people of New York City benefits the people of all the Republic, benefits, indeed, your own neighbors, relatives, and friends who have gone out from among you to dwell with us in the big city by the sea. [Applause.]

To Scrap Certain Naval Vessels.

SPEECH

OF

HON. TOM CONNALLY,

OF TEXAS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 16, 1922.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11214) authorizing the President to scrap certain vessels in conformity with the provisions of the treaty to limit naval armaments.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hesitate to invade this discussion that has been conducted so notably by the two gentlemen from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER and Mr. MOORE], both of whom are learned in the law, and both of whose minds are filled with the traditions and the glory of that great State which has produced so many men eminent in not only fashioning but in construing the Constitution of the United States. This bill I believe to be absolutely necessary to carry into execution the terms of the limitation of armament treaty entered into between the United States and the four other great powers. I am very much gratified to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], whose views of the Constitution heretofore have exhibited evidences of elasticity, announce here on the floor that he agrees almost in toto with the views of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER]. I was not pleased, however, to hear the utterances of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who maintained the opposite view, and, while not in so many words conveying it, exhibited a tendency to view the treaty-making power as almost all-embracing and to entertain the view that a treaty made between this country and a foreign power could override constitutional statutes of Congress and perhaps even some of the grants of power under the Constitution. I recall, however, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] about a year ago, when there was before this House for decision the question of whether or not the Congress as a Congress had the right to declare peace with Germany by joint resolution at that time, when those of us on this side of the aisle were insisting that that was a matter within the scope of the treaty-making power, the conclusion of the war and the making of peace, because it affected the external relations of the United States, because it affected our status in reference to a foreign power—I recall that the gentleman from Ohio, in seeming contradiction to the view he now maintains, asserted Congress could invade the domain of the treaty-making power and by joint resolution of Congress declare a state of peace to exist between the United States and Germany. But what is the treaty-making power?

There is to be borne in mind a distinction between the treaty-making power, in so far as it affects the United States, and the common acceptation of the treaty-making power as it affects European nations, and there must be borne in mind the difference in the character of the Federal Government and the character of foreign sovereignties. We must remember that when the United States was first fashioned, and before that time even, the colonists in dealing with international affairs still carried into their thoughts and into their polity the idea of European sovereignty. Under the European system each king was a sovereign, each emperor was a sovereign, and as a sovereign could negotiate peace, declare war, could make treaties affecting anything within the scope of his government. But when the Government of the United States fashioned its Constitution there were 13 sovereignties already in existence. Before there was any Nation there were the States, and under our dual system every shred of sovereignty that was not delegated to the Federal Government still resides in each one of the States or the people, and so while the treaty-making power by the Constitution was delegated to the Federal Government the jurisdiction of the treaty-making power was limited to the scope of particular powers which the Constitution delegated to the Federal Government. So the Federal Government through the treaty-making route can not absorb any power which belongs to the State governments. For instance, no one would contend that the Federal Government by treaty with a foreign government could provide that slavery should exist in one of the States, because another part of the Constitution provides that slavery shall not exist anywhere within the confines of this Republic. So to that extent a treaty is not the supreme law of the land. As was well shown by the gentleman from Virginia, the Constitution provides that, first, the Constitution; second, the statutes of Congress passed in pursuance of the Constitution, in other words, a statute which is founded upon the power given to Congress in the Constitution—in other words, a constitutional statute—and, third, a treaty. How made? Treaties made just like an act of Congress. Treaties made under the powers delegated to the Federal Government in the Constitution.

These things shall be the supreme law of the land. The treaty-making power is limited by all other portions of the Federal Constitution. For instance, Congress has the power to levy taxes. Congress has the power to levy tariff duties, and while the President of the United States might negotiate a treaty with a foreign power providing for the fixing of certain tariff duties or rates on foreign goods, yet until the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States and the President, functioning as Congress, should in pursuance of that treaty pass an act of Congress fixing those rates or duties at the figures provided in the treaty, the treaty would be inoperative or executory, as was suggested by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. Take the instance of land tenures. Suppose the Government executed a treaty, say, with Japan providing that her nationals would have the right to acquire in fee simple land in the United States, and the State, on the other hand, in which it was proposed to buy the land prohibited that thing happening, what would be the result of that collision?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from South Carolina has put his finger on a very troublesome question, one that is to perplex us in years to come. My own view on that question—and then I will give the court's view, which I am sure is better than my view—is that the Government of the United States, the Federal Government, can no more interfere or regulate any of the internal or police powers of the several States by the treaty-making power than the Federal Government can itself intervene and regulate the tenure of lands in South Carolina.

Of course, the gentleman from South Carolina will appreciate that the Federal Government has no right whatever to enact, for instance, a statute to in anywise fix the law of descent and distribution or inheritance in South Carolina. But there is a line of cases, with which I am sure the gentleman from South Carolina is familiar, regarding a treaty which the United States at one time had, I believe, with France respecting the right of French citizens, American aliens, to inherit property within the several States. But I think the gentleman from South Carolina, if he will thoroughly investigate those questions, will find that the treaty, under the decision of the court, was not held to in anywise affect the laws of the several States as to the descent of property, but that the only factor, that the only power which the treaty had, was to divest French citizens of the taint of alienage, which was set forth in the State law as being a bar to inheritance. In other words, the treaty did not affect the law of inheritance, but removed the bar of alienage. It was held that alienage or nonalienage was a Federal question, but inheritance was not.

Now, with reference to Japan. I really do not fear that question as a practical one, for this reason: In the case of Japan let us suppose that the Federal Government, the President and the Senate, should conclude a treaty with Japan providing that Japanese citizens, in the same language as the French treaty, should have the same rights to inherit within the United States that the United States citizens had to inherit in Japan. I can not believe that two-thirds of the Senate would ever ratify a treaty which would be so hostile to what is the generally accepted public opinion in the United States. I can not conceive that the Senate would so interfere with the State's right to determine that particular question, the question of inheritance of real property, even indirectly.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will permit one other question. Take another view—and I will take not more than a minute of your time—if the United States negotiated a treaty with Japan or China guaranteeing that their children that attend schools should have equal schooling and have the right to attend the schools of the children of any other race in any State in this Union, have they the power to do that where the State itself says for the different races there must be different schools?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Unhesitatingly, my answer to the gentleman from South Carolina is that the Federal Government does not possess the power by treaty to regulate matters of that kind, for the simple reason that under our dual system of government the internal affairs of the States, the control, or the exercise, rather, of their police powers, the regulation of descent and distribution of property, of public education, and of the questions that affect purely the social intercourse of their own people, so far as they do not affect Federal questions, are absolutely within the power of the State, and the control over those questions was never delegated by the Constitution to the Federal Government, and not being within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, the Federal Government can not intermeddle with them by treaty or in any other way, because the power to meddle with them in any fashion was never granted to the Federal Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. That being the case, then, there is no power of treaty with another nation that can in any wise control the police power of any State, because the State itself can not make a treaty; only the United States Government can make a treaty, and therefore the police power of a State can not be interfered with by treaty in any way? That is the conclusion of the gentleman?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is my opinion. I will give the gentleman better authority than myself. The Supreme Court of New Hampshire, away back yonder 50 years ago, held as follows:

The police power of the several States, regarded as separate governments, is not a subject matter to which the treaty-making power extends.

For the obvious reason that it was not a matter to which the power of the Federal Government extends. And not being within the power of the Federal Government to deal with it, the Federal Government can not deal with it by treaty or in any other fashion. The California Supreme Court—and this is getting closer to the Japanese question, although this was many years ago—as early as 1850 decided that a treaty is supreme only when made in relation to those subjects the jurisdiction over which has been exclusively intrusted to Congress.

So we have here the decisions of two of the supreme courts of the States, in addition to the great array of Federal decisions, laying down the limits of the treaty-making power.

Now, the clause in the Constitution which gives to the Federal Government the treaty-making power is limited, as I said a little while ago, by other clauses of the Constitution. In other words, the Federal Constitution gives to Congress the power to admit new States, for instance, and under the power to admit new States Congress by joint resolution admitted the State of Texas to the Union in 1845.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Was not that because they did not have a two-thirds vote in the Senate to ratify a treaty with Texas, which was an independent government?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is true, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina; but that does not reach the question that Congress, under the grant in the Constitution which says Congress has the power to admit new States, had the power and the right under the Constitution to admit Texas by joint resolution irrespective of a treaty or any other consideration. Now, it might be said that the United States had the power to admit Texas by a treaty. My contention is that if that treaty had been ratified by the Senate it would not have had the effect of admitting Texas as a State into this Union until the Congress, which consists of both branches of the lawmaking body, should in some way have expressed its assent and agreement to the admission of Texas into the Union, just as we are here to-day by this legislation giving the assent of the House of Representatives as a part of the Congress of the United States to the execution of a treaty already made and ratified by the Senate. Congress having the power to "admit new States" must have exercised that power, or Texas, though by treaty a part of United States territory, would not have become a State of the Union.

But I must run along. So the treaty-making power is just like any other Federal power, it must keep within the domain of Federal power. The most confused one and uncertain question relating to the treaty power is the one referred to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], and that is the inheritance of property in the case of the French treaty.

But the immediate question involves the objects and purposes of the limitation of armament treaty and the four-power pact, its handmaiden and companion through the Senate, the other branch of the lawmaking power. It has been the dream of all modern times, of statesmen and philosophers, somewhere in the future, in some future state, to arrive at a period when the world might be able to set up some plan or some instrumentality whereby great nations might settle their disputes, not out on the battle field, but in the council chamber or around the council board.

It will be recalled that at the end of the Queen Anne wars, in the early part of the eighteenth century, in 1713-14, I believe it was, the Abbe Charles Irenée Castel de St. Pierre promulgated his plan of universal peace. With all of the zeal and the enthusiasm of a soul that was anxious to bring about the regeneration of Europe, he promulgated his plan to the nations of the world. It involved not simply disarmament; there was involved, of course, the idea of disarmament; but away and beyond the question of disarmament was the idea of an association among the then nations of the world whereby their disputes would be settled by conciliation, by arbitration, by the canons of reason and of law, rather than by the arbitrament of the battle field. But the world was not ready for the adoption of such a plan.

Then we skip along for a hundred years or more, and Rousseau, that great Frenchman, proposed a plan for universal peace. His idea contained an extension and a modification of those that had gone before; but that great Frenchman, who did so much to bring on the French Revolution, who did so much to bring on that great cataclysm which shook to its foundations every throne of Europe—this man Rousseau advocated another plan for universal peace. He denounced in unmeasured terms the theory of the balance of power. He had seen Europe embroiled for years and centuries under the theory of the balance of power. Two or three great nations would form an alliance or league, and then in order to offset its influence and power another group of powerful nations would form an alliance, and playing the force and weight of their influence against each other, inevitably the clash of their ambitions would end in the shock of arms. And so he promulgated his plan, but the world was not ready for it, and it was rejected.

Then that great Englishman, Jeremy Bentham, in 1789 set before Europe his plan and advocated its adoption. He laid down as the corner stone of his plan, not disarmament—disarmament was a part of his scheme—but Jeremy Bentham laid down the proposition that peace could never be assured, that the reign of reason would never be satisfied until a common court of judicature could be set up to which the nations of the earth should be willing to submit their controversies and abide the decisions of that tribunal.

But the plan of Jeremy Bentham did not get anywhere. Then, within the confines of Germany, Kant, the great philosopher, gave to the world practically the same plans as those that had gone before, except that he enlarged and expanded the doctrines of Rousseau and Jeremy Bentham. Kant said that the world can never enjoy peace permanently until the nations would submit themselves to the control of law and reason. As he remarked—

A perfect civil constitution can not be established unless the external relations between States are regulated according to law, with reason supporting the law.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the disarmament treaty is very good as a beginning, but in the four-power treaty I fear that we have fallen into ways that may prove troublesome. Instead of inviting all the nations of the world to form an association, to set up a tribunal such as has been discussed here, in which the humblest as well as the greatest might submit its controversies, the treaty has set up an organization of the four great naval powers of the world and excludes from the benefits of that treaty the small, the weak, and the defenseless nations of the earth. Being associated in a four-power treaty with these three other great powers, consciously or unconsciously, willingly or unwillingly, we can not close our eyes to future contests in which they are concerned. We can not dissociate ourselves from them unless their attitude or their conduct places themselves absolutely without the pale of all reason.

The limitation of armament treaty goes a long way. I favor the naval limitation treaty; I favor this bill that carries out its provisions. Some of you gentlemen will recall that more than a year ago, standing on this floor, I offered an amendment to the naval appropriation bill providing that the President of the United States should issue an invitation to all the nations of the earth to enter into a disarmament treaty.

You will remember that there stood upon this floor the majority leader, Mr. MONDELL, of Wyoming, and that he sought to make a point of order and to have the amendment discarded; that being unsuccessful, you will remember how it was overwhelmed with votes. But later on there was incorporated in that bill in the Senate an amendment which made possible the calling of the Disarmament Conference and the agreement to the treaty that we have under discussion now. But we have only gone a little way. We have only scratched the surface of this question of disarmament. You will never secure peace merely by agreeing to carry one pistol instead of two. We shall never learn to settle international disputes in peace until we set up somewhere an agency for settling the question about which men fight. Great nations may fight with small armaments and small navies. Though the carnage may not be as great, it will be prolonged, perhaps, for a longer period of time, and in the aggregate may bring more suffering than if great armies and navies should quickly bring the issue to a settlement. The League of Nations, in whose creation the United States, through our great President, Woodrow Wilson, had so large a part, is now undertaking to meet its high conception; but the United States stands aloof. We owe it to the world to enter the league with reservations and amendments, or to create a new agency that shall lead the way to peace in honor and with justice. And so I trust that the President of the United States may not hesitate to go forward with the ambitious program which he has proclaimed as being his ultimate goal, but that this is only the beginning, and a small beginning at that. I trust that the President of the United States may not content himself with associating this Nation with the great nations which are signatory to this treaty, but the association of nations which is his goal may ultimately be brought into being and that the United States may participate not only with the four nations named in the Pacific pact, but that we may invite to the council board all the nations of the earth, in order that the small and weak ones as well as the great and powerful may be able to lay down their arms, not because some treaty requires them to do so but because they are able to settle their disputes according to law and reason, and have no necessity for arms to wage a war that can not come out of a controversy that has been settled in peace, amity, and good will. [Applause.]

The Tariff and the Dye Industry.

SPEECH
OF
HON. WILLIAM H. KING, OF UTAH,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Thursday, June 1 (legislative day of April 20), 1922.

The Senate had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has presented certain conclusions and an eloquent presentation in general terms. I regret, however, that he has not submitted facts or reasons for the conclusions which he draws. He does not submit reasons for rates which practically amount to an embargo upon dyes and intermediates and which appear in paragraphs 25 and 26 of this bill. As Senators have perceived, these paragraphs provide exceedingly high rates of duty—60 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound upon the finished dyes and 50 per cent ad valorem and 7 cents per pound upon intermediates.

Mr. President, these rates are entirely too high, even from the standpoint of the extreme protectionist; and I now move to amend paragraph 25, page 10, line 17, by striking out the numerals "50" and inserting in lieu thereof the numerals "30." Perhaps I can reach the same result by moving a disagreement to the committee amendment. I am seeking to reduce the rate as suggested by the bill from 50 per cent ad valorem upon the intermediates to 30 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall move to strike out, in line 18, the word "and" and the numeral "7," so as to complete the amendment which I have offered.

The Senator from New Jersey has argued that there was no dye industry in the United States prior to the war, and that the high rates found in paragraphs 25 and 26 are imperatively required in order that the dye industry, which has now assumed immense proportions, shall be permitted to continue; in addition he insists that an embargo should be placed upon all coal-tar products, as well as upon all synthetic organic chemical compounds. When we reach that part of the bill dealing with the embargo I shall have something to say concerning it. Permit me to add in passing that the principle of an embargo, even to high protectionists, is obnoxious, because they can see that it may eventually destroy the protective system.

If high protection or prohibition of imports is to be effected by embargoes, then efforts will be directed toward formulating embargo bills instead of tariff measures. If an embargo upon one commodity or an allied group of commodities can be imposed, then other greedy interests will seek embargoes. This procedure would discredit any rational or fair scheme of protection and ultimately create such a revulsion toward the entire policy of protection as to threaten its destruction.

It is true there are some protectionists, and members of his school are found in this Chamber, who would exclude all imports, or at least exclude commodities and products of every kind and character that possibly can be produced in the United States. The suggestion has been made by foolish extremists that we should grow tea and tropical fruits and products not indigenous to our soil in the United States, notwithstanding that their development would compel enormous capital and the returns would not be commensurate with the investment or the labor cost involved. Such a view belongs to the prehistoric age. It is in keeping with a blind and reactionary policy incompatible with the progress of this century.

The theory of protection, as I understand it, contemplates legitimate and fair competition. It proceeds upon the theory that there shall be sufficient tariff to enable the domestic manufacturer to fairly compete with the foreign manufacturer. But an embargo negatives the idea of a tariff for protection; it rests upon the view that the domestic producer shall have the exclusive market though it results in a monopoly. It isolates the country adopting a general embargo policy and destroys its foreign trade and commerce. No wonder that reputable newspapers in the United States, of the Republican faith, refuse to approve of the pernicious embargo policy. Leading Republican economists denounce embargoes as they oppose what they call "free trade." They perceive that embargoes will destroy any fair protective policy, and appreciate that if embargoes are extended to one industry they will provoke demands from other industries for like legislation.

The Senator from New Jersey contends that no tariff can afford adequate protection to coal-tar products. His idea seems to be they are sui generis, subject to no law and incapable of being protected by any tariff bill that may be framed.

Mr. President, those adopting this view will have difficulty in convincing the public that coal-tar products are to be differentiated from other commodities manufactured in the United States and elsewhere. In my opinion the record is clear that if protection is desired for coal-tar products, rates may be provided that will not only afford protection, but indeed may result in the prohibition of imports.

The House of Representatives, which can not be accused of being favorable to temperate tariff rates, repudiated the idea of an embargo. It placed in the bill tariff duties so high as to practically turn over to the domestic producers a monopoly upon the dyestuff industry.

Following the war, when hysteria and lack of information produced irrational measures, an embargo bill, temporary in character, was passed. Misrepresentations were made as to conditions in Germany and particularly as to the quantity of dyes on hand in Germany. Doctor Herty and other propagandists and lobbyists, representing the domestic dye manufacturers, represented to the American people and to Congress, that Germany had such an abundance of dyes on hand, that she would flood the world and destroy the dye industry of the United States and other countries. Owing to the false claims made, Congress was induced to place an embargo on dyes. But the bill went further, as it is interpreted by the Treasury Department. The emergency tariff bill which contains the embargo provisions, placed synthetic organic compounds upon the embargo list and made it impossible to import them into the United States, except under an obnoxious, oppressive, and bureaucratic system.

When the emergency tariff bill was pushed through the Senate, under whip and spur, I am sure the understanding of the overwhelming majority of Senators was that its provisions, so far as they related to the commodities embraced within the two paragraphs under consideration, referred only to dyestuffs. No one dreamed that camphor, for instance, which is now made as a synthetic compound, and many others which might be enumerated, were to be covered by this general embargo.

I stated some days ago indirectly in the discussion of this chemical schedule, that a fraud was perpetrated upon the Senate and upon the country in the emergency tariff bill with respect to medicinals and synthetic compounds which may not be classified as dyes. I have nothing to retract with respect to that statement.

I come now to these two paragraphs, and I want to briefly discuss them.

The duties imposed on coal-tar intermediates in paragraph 24 and upon coal-tar products in paragraph 26 of the chemical schedule in the pending bill present one of the most objectionable and unjustifiable features of the bill. The hearings before the Senate committee are void of any facts or representations upon which the unprecedented increase in the rate from 30 per cent ad valorem to 50 per cent ad valorem on the intermediates designated in paragraph 25, and the increase from 35 per cent to 60 per cent ad valorem on the coal-tar products within paragraph 26, were made by the Finance Committee of the Senate. But these are not the only objectionable features of these paragraphs. The Senate committee has also brought in a provision that the specific duty of 7 cents per pound shall be imposed upon "a standard of strength" for each article which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall conform to the lowest commercial strength in use in the United States prior to July 1, 1914; and the Senate committee further brings in an amendment which includes within these obnoxious provisions the synthetic acids in paragraph 1.

I shall be glad if my colleague or other members of the committee would advise me if my interpretation of this part of the section is correct, because if it is, then this is more than a joker.

Mr. SMOOT. My attention was called to another matter. I would like to have my colleague repeat his last statement.

Mr. KING. The Senate committee has also reported a provision that the specific duty of 7 cents per pound shall be imposed upon "a standard of strength" for each article which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shall conform to the lowest commercial strength—that is the interpretation which I think can be placed upon the language—in use in the United States prior to July 1, 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where there is more than one chemical strength.

Mr. KING. The Senate committee reports an amendment which includes within its obnoxious provisions the synthetic acids in paragraph 1, the miscellaneous articles in paragraph 5, the synthetic esters and ethers in paragraph 35, the synthetic flavoring extracts in paragraph 37, the synthetic aromatic and odoriferous chemicals and perfumes in paragraph 56, the synthetic stains and colors for paints in paragraph 63, the synthetic hydrosulphite compounds in paragraph 79, and the synthetic products used in gunpowder in paragraph 1578.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator has put the wrong construction on this provision. The provision referred to by my colleague is as follows:

Provided further, That any article or product which is within the terms of paragraph 1—

That is, acid.

Five—

That is, chemicals.

Thirty-five—

Ethers and esters.

Thirty-seven—

Flavors.

Fifty-six—

Perfumes.

Sixty-three—

Colors not specially provided for.

Seventy-nine—

Certain mixtures.

Or 1578—

Explosives.

As well as within the terms of paragraph 25—

That is, intermediates.

Twenty-six—

Coal-tar products.

Or 1546—

That is, the crude coal-tar products.

Shall be assessed for duty or exempted from duty, as the case may be, under paragraph 25—

Which is intermediates.

Twenty-six—

Coal-tar products.

Or 1546—

The coal-tar crudes.

The object of that is to prevent any conflict whatever between the items following in these paragraphs and paragraph 26 of this bill, and wherever there is a conflict in any way, then of course they will fall under paragraph 26.

Mr. KING. Does it not mean that having dealt with various items such as I have described—acids, synthetic esters and ethers, synthetic flavoring extracts, synthetic aromatic and odoriferous chemicals, and so forth—in other parts of the bill and subjected them to certain rates, either ad valorem or specific, that we now by this provision withdraw them from those paragraphs and subject them to the higher rate placed in paragraphs 25 and 26?

Mr. SMOOT. That will not be the result. These are coal-tar acids, and they are not all mentioned in the paragraphs we have referred to, but they fall in the basket clause. Whenever they fall in the basket clause, and it is found that the article is a coal-tar acid, and there is any conflict whatever as between whether they shall fall in this paragraph or in the basket clause, then they shall fall under this paragraph. Not only that, but they can not fall in this paragraph unless they are coal-tar products.

Mr. KING. I am not certain about that. If my colleague's interpretation is correct, I have no particular criticism along the lines which I have indicated.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me read to my colleague what the Tariff Commission said in relation to it:

Suggested changes.—Page 12, lines 15 to 19 of H. R. 7456: The provision "That any article or product which may come within the terms of other paragraphs of this act, as well as within the terms of paragraph 25, 26, or 1546, shall be assessed for duty or exempted from duty, as the case may be, under paragraph 25, 26, or 1546," is too broad. It is therefore suggested that the following phrasing, in which conflicting paragraphs are referred to by number, be adopted:

"That any article or product which may come within the terms of paragraph 1, 5, 25, 37, 56, 63, 79, or 1578 of this act, as well as within the terms of paragraph 25, 26, or 1546, shall be assessed for duty or exempted from duty, as the case may be, under paragraph 25, 26, or 1546."

That is exactly the language that the Tariff Commission recommended, and it was for the very purpose of doing away with the coal-tar items that may fall in a basket clause not specifically provided in those sections. Wherever there was a conflict, then it could fall under paragraph 25 or paragraph 26, paragraph 25 for the intermediates and paragraph 26 for the coal-tar products, or, if it was a crude, then under paragraph 1547.

Mr. KING. It seems clear to me that any article found in paragraphs 1, 5, 35, 37, 56, 63, 79, or 1578, notwithstanding the rates fixed in this paragraph, if it shall be of coal-tar origin, or if there shall be any of the products or derivatives of coal tar employed in its manufacture, will be taken bodily from those paragraphs and transferred to paragraphs 25 or 26 and subjected to the higher rates found herein.

Mr. SMOOT. I know my colleague does not want to misrepresent this matter.

Mr. KING. I do not, and I am going to be sure that no injustice is being done to the American people by this language.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that my colleague does not want to accomplish that any more than I myself on these schedules. If we take the paragraphs named in this provision, it will be found that each one of them specifically mentions the items, with the exception of those not specifically provided for, and then they must be coal-tar products or they will not be affected by this provision. I want to assure my colleague that there can not be any result from this provision other than to provide in the basket clause, where there is a coal-tar product that may be outside of the paragraph in which it should have gone, that it would fall into one of those paragraphs, and under the provision of each of those paragraphs where it is not specifically provided for. I ask my colleague to keep in mind that they must be from a coal-tar, product, that they must not be mentioned in any one of those paragraphs, and that they must be amassed from a coal-tar product, then they fall in the basket clause where there is a conflict between the basket clause and claims that would fall under any of the sections named.

Mr. KING. To illustrate what I mean in a concrete way, in paragraph 35 this language is employed:

> And ethers and esters of all kinds not specifically provided for, 30 per cent ad valorem.

It seems to me there can be no controversy that if any ether or ester was in any manner formed from coal tar, or if coal tar or any of its derivatives entered into the construction of any of the ethers or esters, then the provision of 30 per cent ad valorem, for which we voted when we considered paragraph 35, would be held to be inapplicable, and the article would be transferred from paragraph 35 to paragraph 26 and be subjected to the higher rates of duty found therein.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has not made the statement just as it is.

Mr. KING. That is the statement I made in the beginning.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not the statement the Senator made in the beginning, I will say to my colleague. The statement the Senator has now made is absolutely correct. Paragraph 35 is not to cover an ester or ether derived from coal tar. It was not intended to and does not cover it, just as my colleague says. So there is no conflict now between my colleague and myself on that point.

Mr. KING. The language which I employed was this——

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague said, as I remember, that we were taking the articles out of these paragraphs and putting them into those paragraphs in which the articles are named and referred to as paragraphs 15, 35, and so forth. That is as I understood my colleague to state it. It does not take an item out of those paragraphs. They are not provided for in those paragraphs, but all coal-tar derivatives fall under section 26.

Mr. KING. It is a question of terminology and construction of language. I repeat the language in paragraph 35, anticipating the antecedent subject:

> And ethers and esters of all kinds not specifically provided for, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Now, "not specifically provided for" where?

Mr. SMOOT. In the bill.

Mr. KING. We have been dealing with esters and ethers and other products in paragraph 35, as we dealt with various products in the other paragraphs to which I have called attention. My colleague says that is true provided the esters or ethers are not formed in any way from coal tars or any of their derivatives, in which event they would be transferred from the omnibus or basket clause in paragraph 35 to paragraph 26 and be subjected to the increased rate, all of which means, with the explanation which my colleague has offered, that in those paragraphs to which I have directed attention, starting with Nos. 1, 35, and so forth, if any of the articles or products or substances there referred to are in part the products of coal tars or their derivatives, then they are lifted out of those paragraphs and are brought within paragraph 26 and subjected to the rates of duties therein provided.

Mr. SMOOT. But they are not provided for in paragraphs 1 and 35, I will say to my colleague, because in paragraph 35 the esters and ethers are made from other products than coal tar. We are dealing in paragraph 25 with all coal-tar intermediates and in paragraph 26 we are dealing with all coal-tar products. If the esters and ethers are derivatives from coal-tar products, they ought to fall in paragraph 26. If not, there would be a conflict at once. That is the reason why we put in each one of the specific paragraphs referred to by the Senator the items falling within the paragraph not specifically provided for, because they fall in this one paragraph. As to the rates, that is another question.

Mr. KING. My colleague comes back to the position which I have assumed from the beginning, namely, that paragraph 26 is intended to take from other paragraphs in the bill items or articles which are formed in part from coal tars or any of their derivatives and subject them to the rates, not in those paragraphs provided, but the higher rates in this paragraph provided. The result will be that if esters or ethers or any of the compounds or products found in those paragraphs to which I have directed attention are in part derived from coal-tar products, they are to be subjected to a higher rate of duty than other esters and ethers that may be formed from other products or compounds as bases. In other words, we are to take the coal-tar industry and all synthetic organic compounds and give them preference, and give the products which are formed from coal tar or coal-tar derivatives higher rates of duty than products formed from natural or other compounds. The ordinary ether or ester not produced from coal-tar products bears an ad valorem of 30 per cent. If an ester or ether were formed from coal tar or any of its derivatives, then it is to be subjected to a higher rate of duty.

My colleague and myself have no controversy as to the effect of this legislation. I wanted to be sure that the intention was plainly expressed in the bill and that Senators fully understand that in voting for these rates they intended to discriminate against products not of the coal-tar variety; that they intended to give to the coal-tar industry higher rates and special privileges.

It is now clear that this bill aims to secure such results, and if Senators vote for these paragraphs they are supporting an indefensible and inequitable policy.

It seems clear that a manufacturer who produces an ester or an ether, or a flavoring extract, or some compound embraced within paragraphs 1, 5, 35, 37, 56, 63, 79, or 1578 of this bill, where any coal-tar derivative or any synthetic organic chemical product is employed in its production, will derive an advantage over the manufacturer who produces similar articles or commodities but does not employ in their production coal-tar products or any of their derivatives.

The producer first referred to will obtain the almost prohibitive rates found in paragraphs 25 and 26, but the other manufacturer must be content with the low rates found in the other paragraphs to which I have just referred. I repeat, the dye industry seems to be the special favorite of Congress and particularly the Senate, and under the pretense of protecting the dye industry, manufacturers of various kinds of medicines, pharmaceuticals, and chemical compounds are securing both the extortionate rates provided herein as well as the benefit of the embargo provisions appearing in a later paragraph of this bill.

Let me say in passing that a fraud was perpetrated upon the Senate when the embargo bill was passed. The claim was made that the dye industry was exposed to severe competition from German dye producers and that the rates found in the law, which was in force when the emergency tariff bill was before the Senate, were inadequate to afford protection. It was alleged that the embargo was to extend only to the dye industry and was to expire when a tariff law was enacted, which it was stated by Republican leaders would be before the expiration of this Congress; but under the broad folds of the dye embargo the exclusive provisions were extended to more than 2,000 medicines, pharmaceuticals, and chemical compounds. An injustice was done to the American people and a fraud and deception practiced upon the Senate.

I have referred to coal-tar products. Senators, of course, are familiar with the fact that they are the by-products of coke ovens, and that the United States to-day is producing more of these by-products, and at a lower cost, than any other country in the world. It is known that the United States leads the world in the production of all forms of crudes and intermediates which are the bases of dyes and which are the by-products of coke ovens.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to say that we lead the world in crudes and in intermediates?

Mr. KING. I did not put it quite that way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is it not true, then, that we do lead the world in crudes, but not in intermediates?

Mr. KING. If we lead the world in crudes, there is no reason why we can not lead the world in intermediates, because the intermediates are made from the crudes

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If they are protected.

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, it is not a question of protection at all. I repeat that because of the great development of our coal industry and the enormous output of our coke ovens we can lead the world in crudes, in intermediates, and in dyes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator from Utah take the position that we can do so without protection?

Mr. KING. Yes. I take it that we can do it without protection but I am not here urging, and the motion which I have suggested does not indicate that I am urging, that there shall be no tariff on dyes. I repeat, however, that, after having studied this question more than superficially, I do not hesitate to say that we can manufacture not only crudes but intermediates and dyes in competition with the world; we do not need protection in order to secure the domestic market, but also an important part of the markets of the world. My position, Mr. President, is that because of the great resources of the United States, the skill and genius of its people, the superiority of its manufacturing plants, and other factors not necessary now to enumerate, the dye industry of the United States can not only successfully meet any foreign competition in the domestic market but it can secure a very considerable part of the world's market. It is quite likely, however, that there are some few dyes that we may not be able to produce as cheaply as other countries because of the small quantity consumed and the large amount of time, patience, and labor required in their production.

The American manufacturer seeks quantity production. There are some forms of laces and handmade goods which we will never produce in the United States, not because we can not but because we do not care to engage in the production. The benefits or profits derived therefrom are too unimportant. There are various dyes the consumption of which in the United States—and, indeed, throughout the world—is small, and the American dye producers, no matter how powerful and dominant the industry may be not only in the United States but in the world, will not care to engage in their manufacture.

We are now producing at least 62 per cent of all the dyes consumed in the United States and are exporting millions of pounds annually. However, Mr. President, the question of protection of the dye industry is not involved in the present discussion, and no motion will be submitted during the discussion of this billwhich will call for the free admission of dyes into the United States. On this side of the Chamber the position is being taken that schedules which provide a reasonable tariff upon intermediates and finished dyes will not be opposed. We are opposing the extortionate rates found in paragraphs 25 and 26 and we are likewise opposing the proposition to grant an embargo, and thus turn over to the domestic producers the complete control of the domestic market, with power to exploit the textile industry of our country.

When the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] interrupted me, I was about to state that before the war we were producing coal cheaper than it was being produced in any country in the world. High-grade bituminous coal was sold at many mines in the United States at approximately $1 per ton. My recollection is that even in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and Great Britain prices were somewhat higher. Many American mine operators have employed the most scientific and up-to-date methods in their mining operations and have put into effect economies that enable them to produce coal at exceedingly low prices.

Senators are familiar with the Versailles treaty and its provisions which materially interfere with Germany's industrial development and progress. Much of the coal of Germany was taken from her by this treaty, and she is also compelled to furnish for many years to come very large quantities annually to some of the victorious nations. With cheap coal and the large output of coal-tar products, the production of dyes becomes a comparatively easy thing.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator if he does not want to be interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I have no objection to being interrupted; it is not my purpose to conclude as soon as possible.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I shall not again interrupt the Senator.

Mr. KING. I have no objection. I want the Senator to feel entirely free to interrupt me whenever he desires.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has referred to the immense coal deposits we have here and of the immense opportunities to develop coke products. While that is true so far as ammonia and some other by-products are concerned, yet unless we can maintain a flourishing domestic dye industry and retain the American market for it, there will be no use for raw material from coke products amounting to about a billion dollars' worth a year. The point I make is that we must protect the intermediates and the dye products in order to utilize the crudes. Even though we have a vast amount of coal, it will be of no use so far as a great portion of the by-products are concerned unless we can utilize the by-products in the dye industry.

Mr. KING. If I understand the Senator correctly, I must express my dissent from the statement which he has just made. His position, as I understand him, is that the by-products of the coke ovens are of value only in the production of dyes. In other words, that once we develop the dye industry in the United States these immensely valuable by-products will be absolutely wasted. Mr. President, the Senator upon investigation will discover that but 10 per cent of the by-products of coke ovens are utilized in the manufacture of dyes. I have not time to enumerate the multitude of products and compounds yielded from the by-products of the coke ovens. There are literally hundreds of such products, and the small per cent available for the manufacture of dyes leaves available for other uses and for other purposes a very large part of such by-products, the benefit and value of which it is impossible to determine. Even the 10 per cent available for the manufacture of dyes can be used in the production of other products, so that all of the by-products are of value and may be used, though none are employed in the manufacture of dyes.

Mr. President, it is only within the past few years that the value of the by-products of coke ovens for dye purposes was fully appreciated. German chemists, perhaps, anticipated the possibilities of these by-products sooner than the chemists of other countries. I have been advised, however, that some American chemists foresaw at a very early date in the coal-tar industry the importance of coal-tar products in the manufacture of dyes. Parenthetically I would like to add that the chemists of the United States rank with the chemists of Europe. Indeed in many ways they surpass those of other countries. This has been denominated the "chemical age," and undoubtedly our great economical and industrial progress is largely due to the genius and ability and scientific knowledge of the chemists of the world. The achievements these brilliant men have wrought in this great field entitle them to the crown of immortality and to the gratitude of the world. I sometimes feel that the accomplishments in other fields of human endeavor are feeble and unimportant measured by the triumphs of these characters, whose genius and labor and struggles have lightened the burdens of humanity and marked the path of progress which it is to follow.

Mr. President, I return to the theme which I was discussing when my colleague engaged my attention and directed my thoughts to the meaning of the proviso found in paragraph 26. I repeat, that it is now clear that the proper interpretation to be given to this bill is that all coal-tar products and their derivatives are to obtain much higher rates of duty than are those products which may be placed in the same classification but are not in any manner related to coal-tar products or their derivatives. In other words, diethyl sulphate, ethyl acetate, and ethyl chloride will bear the rate of duty found in paragraph 35, which is very much less than the duties provided in paragraphs 25 and 26; but if either of these products just mentioned is of coal-tar origin, or if any of the derivatives of coal tar are employed in their manufacture, then they are automatically transferred to paragraphs 25 and 26 and a higher rate of duty imposed.

Mr. President, there is no valid reason for this discrimination. A manufacturer producing esters and ethers from natural products should receive the same protection as is granted to a manufacturer who is engaged in the manufacture of coal-tar products or their derivatives. I leave with Senators the conceded fact that various paragraphs in the bill are amended by the proviso found in paragraph 26, which in fact removes from paragraphs 1, 5, 35, 37, 56, 63, 79, or 1578 many commodities and compounds and subjects them to the higher rates provided in paragraph 26.

Mr. President, there is another provision reported by the committee which seems to be designed to give to the Chemical Foundation or others who have been fortunate enough to secure by direct or indirect methods, by purchase or by confiscation, the patents, trade-marks, copyrights, or other property of Germans and Austrians, certain rights, privileges, interests, and property represented by said patents, trade-marks, and so forth. The provision referred to is to the effect that the Government shall confiscate any coal-tar product which comes into our ports bearing the trade-mark or trade name which the Chemical Foundation or any of the vendees to which I have referred may claim to have the exclusive right to use.

Let me add at this point a fact with which most Senators are familiar, that the Alien Property Custodian seized more than 5,800 German patents and a large number of copyrights and trade-marks, most of which were sold to the Chemical Foundation or to the Bayer corporation, and the provision to which I am now calling attention seems to be aimed at the protection of these vendees in any property rights which they may assert under such seizure and sales. Under this provision referred to the obligation is placed upon the Government to determine the legality of all sales and the validity of all transfers of the trade-marks, copyrights, and so forth. It would seem to be the purpose of the provision to make the Government an agent to seize property—at its peril, perhaps, in some instances—for the protection of vendees of the Government or of the Alien Property Custodian. May I inquire of the committee whether it is their purpose to insist upon this amendment to the House bill?

Mr. SMOOT. They are going to offer an amendment to strike it out.

Mr. KING. Then I shall give no further attention to that part of the committee amendment.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the committee to certain provisions of the bill with a view to inquiring whether, upon their own motion, they will not, in the interest of justice, offer certain amendments.
